V. 17. Received—] What is meant here by λαβὼν παρὰ θεοῦ πατρὸς τιμὴν καὶ δόξαν, receiving from God the Father honour and glory, will easily be guessed both by what hath been said Note e. and especially by the μεγαλειότης, majesty of Christ, of which they are said to have been eye-witnesses. For this verse being by the γάρ, for, annex'd as a proof to the former, it must follow that the honour and glory which Christ received here, v. 17. is that majesty which they saw, v. 16. That surely signified the dignity royal that there, by way of vision or prophesie, he was instated in, this Commission sent him from heaven, as it were, by the hands of two great men, Moses and Elias, who also talk'd with him on this subject, and told him what should befal him, first in his passage to this kingdom, and then how it should be exercised by him upon his crucifiers. And then this must be the meaning of his receiving honour and glory here, that is, this kingdom being thus (in vision) instated on him; a solemnity of which is that which follows, φωνῆς ἐνεχθείσης τοιᾶσδε, this, or such a, voice being brought to him, or delivered out of the magnificent glory, (that is, out of the bright shining cloud (see Note one Mat. 3. c.) that appeared in that vision) This is my beloved son, &c. signifying God's purpose of ruling the world by him, devolving the government of all upon him. Some place of mistake here may be, by confounding together this solemnity and this majeſty, from thence imagining that this voice from heaven was the τιμὴ καὶ δόξα honour and glory which he received. But this is a miſtake, it being firſt evident, that there were two things here mentioned of this viſion, one the object of their ſight, of which they were αὐτόπται eye-witneſſes, the other of their hearing, or which ἠκούσαμεν they heard. And the former of theſe was in ſeveral phraſes, the μεγαλειότης majeſty, and τιμὴ καὶ δόξα honour and glory, that was veſted on him; the latter the proclamation, as it were, before him, when in viſion he enters on this office. And of this it is ſaid, ver. 18. καὶ ταύτην τὴν φωνὴν ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν, This voice alſo we heard, as before they had ſeen the majeſty or honour and glory, making theſe, two diſparate things, as the lightning and the thunder, the one to the eye, the other to the ear, but both proofs of the ſame matter (the argument or ſubject here in hand) the kingdom which Chriſt had at his reſurrection entred on, and ſhould now ſhortly actually exerciſe it in the deſtroying of his crucifiers. That λαῶν here in the Nominative hath no Verb following to govern it, is after the manner of theſe Hebraizing writers, and in the conſtruction muſt be ſet as if it were λαοῦ τοῦ, the Genitive taken abſolutely.

g. V. 19. Day-ſtar] The word ἡμέρα day, for Chriſt's coming in vengeance on his crucifiers, hath been interpreted formerly. See Note on Heb. 10. a. Rom. 13. 12. and ſo moſt particularly here it ſignifies, ἡμέρα διαυγάζουσα, the ſhining forth of that day that had been before but obſcurely propheſied of. Then for the word φωσφόρος, that is a known ſtar, which, as a πρόδρομος or harbinger to the day or ſun, uſhers him into our Hemiſphere. Proportionable to this are the particular remarkable paſſages which Chriſt foretold, as the immediate harbingers before this coming of his, ſuch as are mentioned Luc. 21. 28. which when they begin to appear, then, ſaith he, lift up your heads, take comfort, διότι ἐγγίζει ἡ ἀπολύτρωσις ὑμῶν, for, or becauſe, your redemption draweth near. And ſo the Lucifer or morning-ſtar ſhall ſignifie the immediate forerunners of this day, which till it come, they muſt content themſelves with the darker prophecies, and ſuſtain themſelves by that means. And if the addition of ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν in your hearts, wherein the Phoſphorus is ſaid to ariſe, be thought to reſiſt this interpretation, the account of that is ready; Firſt, that the riſing of the Phoſphorus here not being literally to be underſtood, was by this addition very fitly confined to the Metaphorical notation, in our hearts being oppoſed to in the heavens: Secondly, that our hearts being the ſeat of practical judgment, by which we ponder and conſider, this morning-ſtar, ſignifying the forerunners of that eminent famous day, will then be ſaid to ariſe in our hearts, when we by conſideration of the predictions come to take notice of them as ſuch. As the faithful are in ſtory ſaid to have done, when ſeeing the Roman armies to have begirt Jeruſalem, they from thence concluded, according to Chriſt's words, that the deſtruction thereof was nigh, and thereupon, as ſoon as they had the advantage of the ſiege being raiſed, they fled out of the city to Pella, and there continued.

h. V. 20. Interpretation] Ἐπίλυσις here ſeems to be an Agoniſtical word, to ſignifie the ſtarting, or watch-word, or ſign, upon which the racers ſet out or begin their courſe. The place from whence they ſet out is called ἀφέσις, where when they ſet out, they are ſaid to be let looſe, and this is literally ἀπολύεσθαι. To this is the ſending of Prophets here compared, who are ſaid to run, Jer. 23. 21. Ezech. 13. 6, 7. They run, and I ſent them not, that is, οὐκ ἐπέλυσα I gave them no watchword to run, as in the Pſalmiſt, God gave the word, great was the company of preachers. When any undertakes to propheſie without God's ſending, this is ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, of his own ſtarting, and this is here denied of the Prophets of the Old Teſtament; for, as it follows, οὐ θελήματι ἀνθρώπου ἠνέχθη ποτέ, it was never brought by the will of man, that is, t'was never ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως, of their own incitation, but holy men, φερόμενοι ὑπὸ πνεύματος, carried by the Spirit, θεοφορούμενοι, inſpired and carried by God, did propheſie, &c.

CHAP. II.

1. But as among thoſe prophets ſent and incited by the holy Ghoſt, c. 1. 21. ſome falſe ones alſo ſlily crept in; ſo alſo now according to Chriſt's prediction Mat. 24. 11. ſhall there be falſe teachers among you, viz. the Gnoſtick Chriſtians, bringing into the true faith, under pretence of greater perfection, moſt deſtructive doctrines of liberty and licentiouſneſs, and that count it an indifferent thing to deny Chriſt in time of perſecution, (ſee 1 Pet. 2. 21. and Note on Rev. 2. b.) and forſwear him who redeemed them, that are thus unlike him, as not to venture any danger for him who died for them, and do alſo by this means moſt imprudently incur the dangers which they deſire (and pay ſo dear) to avoid, by complying with the Jews, come to ſpeedy deſtruction with them, according to that of Chriſt, Mat. 16. 25.

1. BUT there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, even as there ſhall be falſe teachers among you, who privily ſhall bring in damnable hereſies, * even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction.]

* and that denying καὶ ἀρνούμενοι

2. And theſe carnal doctrines of theirs ſhall have many followers, Mat. 24. 11. and thereby the glorious pure Goſpel of Chriſt ſhall be much defamed, when Chriſtian profeſſors ſhall live ſuch filthy lives.

2. And many ſhall follow † their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom * the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of.]

3. And with cunning diſcourſes ſhall they circumvent you, and gain you to all filthineſs, (ſee Note on Rom. 1. i.) which ſhall within a while be moſt ſignally puniſhed with utter deſtruction here, and damnation attending it.

3. And † through covetouſneſs ſhall they with feigned words make merchandiſe of you: whoſe judgment now of a long time lingreth not, and their damnation ſlumbreth not.]

† with feigned ſpeeches they will gain you to inordinate luſts, ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ πλαστοῖς λόγοις ὑμᾶς ἐμπορεύσονται)

For if God, when the Angels rebelled againſt him, puniſhed them ſeverely, and having decreed them to eternal hell, caſt them preſently out of heaven into the abyſs, a kind of dungeon or dark priſon, there to be reſerved, as condemned malefactors, to the day of judgment, the time of their execution,

4. For if God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkneſs * to be reſerved unto judgment,]

10. But chiefly them that walk after the fleſh in the luſt of uncleanneſs, and deſpiſe government. * Preſumptuous are they, ſelf-willed, they † are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities:] 10. Of this ſort eſpecially are the Gnoſticks, whoſe character it is to commit all filthineſs, and to deſpiſe all kind of authority of magiſtrates or maſters, (1 Tim. 3. 6.) a bold inſolent ſort of men, that can without any trembling or fear ſpeak contumeliouſly of the Apoſtles themſelves, ſee Note on Jude b.

And receive that vengeance that is due to them; thoſe I mean that in the day-time take pleaſure in thoſe villanies which are wont to need the night to cover the ſhame of them, that are become the reproaches of Chriſtianity, committing all villany in their ſacred aſſemblies and feſtivities, and making uſe of their falſe doctrines to turn your Chriſtian feaſts into unclean laſcivious meetings. c.

For attributing divinity to Simon and Helena, and exalting them idolatrouſly above the God of Iſrael, (ſee Note on Jude i.) they entice and catch again, bring back to all manner of carnality and filthineſs thoſe who had not long ſince gotten out of the heathen beſtiality, (ſee Note on Jude b.) and really given them over.

And this upon pretence of giving them liberty, whereas they are themſelves the greateſt ſlaves in the world, to wit, enſlaved to all baſeneſs and filthineſs (ſee Note on c. 1. b.) for the title of victory giving dominion, they muſt needs be ſlaves of thoſe luſts which have conquered them, to whom they have yielded themſelves captives.

20. For if after they have eſcaped the † pollutions of the world, through the * knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, they are again intangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning.] 20. And this is ſo far from being extenuated by the privilege of their being Chriſtians, that it is become the greater and more dangerous guilt by this means; for certainly they that have been converted from all their heathen ſins by accepting of the faith of Chriſt, and then again relapſe and return to them, this latter eſtate of theirs, this Chriſtian heatheniſm, is worſe than their bare heatheniſm at firſt.

† i. return backward, or to what was behind, for the King's MS. reads εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω ἀνακάμψαι

21. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than after they have known it to † turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.] 21. For it had been more for the advantage of ſuch never to have been taught the doctrine of Chriſt and Chriſtian practice, than when they have undertaken to obey it, to fall back again into their heathen vicious courſes.

* But that of the true proverb is befallen them, The dog returning — Συμβέβηκε δὲ αὐτοῖς τὸ τῆς ἀληθοῦς παροιμίας, Κύων ἐπιστρέψας —

But now their condition is a moſt prophane unclean ſtate, beſt ſignified by a dog and a ſwine, two moſt unclean prophane creatures, which among the Jews ſtood interdicted both for ſacrifice and food, and are both obſerved proverbially for this quality, that the dog when any thing lyes upon his ſtomach, which cauſes him to vomit, when that trouble is over, he preſently licks up again what he had before vomited up, (ſee Prov. 26. 11.) and the ſwine, when ſhe is waſhed never ſo clean, takes pleaſure to tumble again in the next mire ſhe comes to. g.

Annotations on Chap. II.

a. V. 5. The eighth perſon] Why the word ὄγδοον the eighth is here prefix'd to the mention of Noah, might be matter of ſome enquiry, were it not ſo ordinary and proverbial among all writers, Jewiſh as well as Heathens, to expreſs the perſons that were ſaved in the Deluge, by this ſtyle, the eighth. Hence the very mountain whereon the Ark reſted is found to be expreſſed and called by this ſtyle, Themanim, that is, τὸ ὄρος the mountain of the eight. So Georgius Elmacinus, Hiſt. Saracen. lib. 1. cap. 10. Heraclius went thence אל קריה תמנין, to the town ſo called the town of the eight, from תמנה octo, which is there rendred Themanitum, and aſcending to the hill תמנין, it ſhould ſure be read, גורדי Gordi (ſo thoſe mountains are called promiſcuouſly Cardiei, Cordyei, Corduени, Gordiæi, Cordæi, Curdi) he ſaw the place of the Ark, the higheſt of all that region. So * Geographus Nubienſis, Mons תמנין Temanim (it ſhould be, תמנין Themanim) idemque Algode (it ſhould be אלגודי Algordi, that is, Gordiæus) in quo requievit navis illa, Navis Noe etiam pax, the hill Themanim, otherwiſe it is alſo called Algordi, upon which the Ark reſted, the Ark of Noah. Ἀφ' οὗ δὲ ἀπῆρεν ἐκεῖθεν, εἰς τὴν λεγομένην Θαμανῶν, about the Cardian mountains, at the town called Themanim that is, the eight. * Clim. 4. Parab. 6. * l. 4. p. 135.

b. V. 12. Made to be taken] The word ἅλωσις, catching, is here in an Active ſenſe, to prey, or take, or catch, and not to be taken, and ἅλωσις εἰς ἅλωσιν made for taking are creatures, beaſts or birds of prey, vultures. So Prov. 24. 9. לאוילת (rendred by the Greek εἰς ἅλωσιν to catch) is in

b. ἅλωσις

in the Chaldee Paraphraſe expreſſed by riſing up early to their prey. So φθορὰ is alſo here in an Active ſenſe, and εἰς φθορὰν ſo εἰς φθορὰν to, or for the corrupting, or defiling, or polluting of others. In reference to which it is that the creatures which are caught and torn by wild beaſts, the θηριάλωτα, are by the law counted unclean or polluted, Lev. 17. 15. (ſee Excerpta Gemaræ tr. Sanhedr. c. 1. §. 7.) and ordinarily by the Rabbins ſet to ſignifie all forbidden meats, as if the lungs of any thing have a hole in them, they call it טרפה, that which is torn by wild beaſts, ſaith Elias Levita in Thisbi, p. 139. And ſo theſe vicious, luſtful, filthy Gnoſticks, that, like the Sodomites, force and corrupt all that come in their way, and by making them their prey, do alſo defile and pollute them (as thoſe creatures that are torn by wild beaſts are accounted polluted) are here ſaid to be γεγεννημένα εἰς ἅλωσιν καὶ φθοράν, like thoſe land-vultures, born to take and pollute, and ἅρπαγες nothing elſe, and I ſuppoſe are noted by ἅρπαγες forcers, ſnatchers, raviſhers, 1 Cor. 5. 10. See Note h. on that Chapter.

c. V. 13. Deceivings] That which is read here ἐν ἀπάταις, in deceits, may not improbably be miſtaken by the ſcribe ἐν ἀπάταις for ἐν ἀγάπαις αὐτῶν, in their Chriſtian feaſts, inſtituted in order to maintaining of Charity, but defiled by the luxury of carnal Goſpellers. Thus it is read in Jude v. 12. (which in moſt things is agreeable with this ſecond of Peter) and that verſe in the other parts of it is directly parallel to this, there σπιλάδες ſpots, as here σπῖλοι καὶ μῶμοι ſpots and blemiſhes; there συνευωχούμενοι, feaſting together, as here in the ſame word, and ſo probably alſo in this word, which differs ſo little from ἀπάταις, that it might be eaſily miſtaken for it.

d. V. 14. Full of adultery] Μοιχαλὶς ſignifies diſtinctly an Μοιχαλὶς adultereſs (not adultery) and the phraſe of, having eyes full of her, is very agreeable to that of the Rhetorician cited by Plutarch De verecund. who diſcribing an impure unchaſt perſon, (an ἀναίσχυντον, one without ſhame) rhetorically ſaid of him, ὐ κόρας ἀλλὰ πόρνας ἐν τοῖς ὄμμασιν ἔχει, that he had whores in his eyes inſtead of κόρας, which is an equivocal word, and ſignifies both a maid (or virgin, oppoſite to πόρνη whore) and the pupilla oculi, the apple of the eye alſo, and is therefore made uſe of in that Rhetor.

e. V. 15. Boſor] The name Boſor, here is Beor in the Βοσὸρ Old Teſtament; the Hebrew being בעור, and the Chaldee pronouncing the ע by S. and accordingly the Arabick tranſlation reads here the ſon of Beor, the ſame that (as here, ſo Jude 11. Rev. 11. 14.) is made uſe of, to exemplifie the Hereticks that were thus eaſily crept into the Church, the Gnoſticks ſo often ſpoken of. As for the fitneſs of repreſenting this hereſie by ἡ ὁδὸς τοῦ Βαλαὰμ, the way of Balaam, three things may eſpecially be obſerved. ἡ ὁδὸς τοῦ Βαλαὰμ Firſt, that he being a Prophet of the true God did yet join in Idol-worſhip with the King of Moab, Num. 22. 41. being taken up with him into the high places of Baal, and 23. 2, 14. 29. building altars, and offering up ſacrifices there. And this was remarkable in the Gnoſticks, (whoſe whole Divinity was a mixture of Chriſtian and Jewiſh with Heathen doctrine) they made no ſcruple, for the ſaving or gaining any thing to themſelves, to join with thoſe who offer'd ſacrifice to Idols. Secondly, that he complied and joined in faction with the Moabites and Midianites, the enemies of God's people, was very willing to aſſiſt them to his uttermoſt, and when God permitted him not to curſe Iſrael, yet he aſſociated with the Midianites, as appears, Num. 31. 8. where he is found with them in the battel. And the ſame was ſignally obſervable of the Gnoſticks, who always complied with the perſecuters of Chriſtianity, whether Jews or Heathens, and were the bittereſt enemies the orthodox Chriſtians had. Thirdly, that he gave counſel to the King of Moab how to corrupt and bring a curſe upon the Iſraelites, by enticing them into uncleanneſs in the matter of Peor, Num. 25. 1. and 31. 16. And the ſame did the Gnoſticks, corrupting all that could be wrought on by their unclean doctrines and practices: ſee Note on Jude f. And as they were parallel in their ſin, ſo were they in their ruin alſo. When the Midianites were deſtroyed by Iſrael, Num. 31. Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor they ſlew with the ſword, v. 8. And ſo when the Jews were deſtroyed by the Romans, the Gnoſticks that complyed with them, were found among them, and deſtroyed alſo.

f. V. 17. Tempeſt] Λαῖλαψ is by Heſychius rendred καταιγὶς Λαῖλαψ and ἀνέμου συσσφὴ. What καταιγὶς notes is by him beſt expreſſed elſewhere, ἐπφορὰ ἀνέμου σφοδροῦ, the violence of a ſtrong wind. To this Phavorinus adds σκότος μὴ συσσφῆς ἀνέμου, darkneſs with a violent wind: And ſo it is here fitly ſet to ſignifie that black wind, as it were, of dark heathen errors and practices, by which theſe νεφέλαι clouds, to which Saint Jude adds ἄνυδροι empty, waterleſs clouds, the Gnoſticks, are driven and carried about, to which therefore is apportioned ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους, the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever, in the end of the verſe.

g. V. 22. Sow that was waſhed] The Hebrew word for a ſwine חזיר is deduced from חזר rediit, reverſus eſt, returning, to note this quality of the ſwine taken notice of by this Proverb, of returning to the mire again.

2. That ye may be mindful of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandments of * us the Apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour;]

* your Apoſtles, for the King's MS. reads ὑμῶν Ἀποστόλων of that which you cannot but have heard, being prophecied of in the Old Teſtament very frequently, Joel 2. and by Chriſt, Mat. 24. and by us Apoſtles of Chriſt (ſee a teſtimony out of Lactantius in Note a. on the title of the Epiſtle to the Romans) viz. that within a ſhort time there ſhould come a notable deſtruction upon the unbelieving or impenitent Jews, and all the polluted Chriſtians among them, and a remarkable deliverance of all the perſevering Chriſtians, the one an act of Chriſt as Lord, the other as Saviour or deliverer.

d. 3. But before this come, there is one thing to precede,

3. Knowing this firſt, that there ſhall come in * the laſt days [a] ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts,]

* the end of the days ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν

a very remarkable defection of many from the Chriſtian profeſſion, ſee 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. according to what was foretold by Chriſt, Mat. 24. 12. and thoſe that thus forſake Chriſt, ſhall betake themſelves to all unclean practices; and therefore this is now to be expected.

b. 4. And they that do thus forſake the faith, ſhall, as a ground of it, pretend that they perceive themſelves cheated by thoſe prophecies,

4. And ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? for † [b] ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.]

† except that

(ſee c. 1. and Mat. 24. b.) which, ſay they, is ſo far from being performed, that all things ſtand unchanged, in the ſame conſtant form, from the beginning of the world till now, ſave only that all the men that have lived upon the earth (father Adam, Noah, Abraham, &c.) are dead, and others now live in their ſteads among us. But for any thing elſe, ſay they, things have gone in a ſetled conſtant courſe ever ſince the creation, without any diſcernible or obſervable change.

c. 5, 6. To theſe I anſwer, d. and firſt for the latter of theſe (ſee Note on Mat. 7. b.)

5. * For this they † willingly are ignorant of, that ‡ by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the ‡ earth ſtanding out of the water and in the water:

6. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, periſhed.]

* For they that are of this mind, are ignorant

† there were heavens from of old, and the earth conſiſting

These Atheiſtical ſcoffers, that ſuppoſe or affirm that there hath been no conſiderable change ſince the creation, do not conſider what a change there was once in Noah's time, the whole world deſtroyed with a flood, for the ſins of impure impenitent ſinners, ſuch as theſe who now object thus; for the heavens being created at the beginning, and the earth ſo framed, that there was abundance of waters within the globe thereof, and it ſelf placed in the midſt of waters, in the clouds round about, God being pleaſed in the creation ſo diſpoſe of it, in order to the puniſhing of wicked men, at length the windows of the heavens, that is, the clouds, were opened, and the fountains of the great deep broken up, Gen. 7. 11. and by this means the whole earth was covered and drowned by waters.

‡ of water and in the midſt of water, by the word of God, ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ δι' ὕδατος συνεστῶσα τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγῳ

e. 7. But the world which now is, by the ſame appointment of God, is now ſecured that it ſhall be drowned no more,

7. But * the heavens and the earth which are now, by the ſame word are kept in ſtore, reſerved unto fire againſt the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.]

(God having given his promiſe for it, Gen. 9. 11.) nor ſuffer any other kind of deſtruction but by fire, which is the puniſhment to be expected by abominable men.

8. But,

8. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day.]

8. This anſwer being firſt given to the latter part of the Atheiſt's objection v. 4. [that all things continue as they were ſince the creation] I now proceed in the ſecond place, (by way of regreſſus, ordinary in Scripture, ſee Note on Mat. 7. b.) to anſwer the former part propoſed by way of queſtion, [Where is the promiſe of his coming? that is, Sure God's promiſe in the Old Teſtament repeated by Chriſt Mat. 24. of his coming to puniſh the obdurate Jews and Gnoſticks, and delivering the pure perſevering believers, is not performed.] And my anſwer is this, That you may be miſtaken in reckoning of times, in thinking that what the prophets have foretold of the latter days, the times of the Meſſias, muſt be inſtantly performed, as ſoon as Chriſt is gone to heaven, or elſe 'twill not be performed at all. In this matter it muſt be conſidered who it is that makes the promiſe, v. 2. an infinite God, and then though forty years (for example) is a very great time among us men, whoſe lives are ſo ſhort, yet with God, who is infinite, a thouſand years is no conſiderable ſpace, but a very ſhort and ſmall duration, Pſal. 90. 4. and therefore though the prophecy be not yet fulfilled, about three or four and thirty years after Chriſt's departure from us, yet it may, and will moſt certainly, and that within few years now.

9. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, (as ſome men count ſlackneſs) but is long-ſuffering † to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.]

† or, for your ſake, for the King's MS. reads δι' ὑμᾶς

9. As for any ſlowneſs in performing his promiſe of coming, which they that expect and deſire to reap a ſudden fruit of it in their deliverance, or that others, which would corrupt them, and make them fall off through deſpair of it, are apt to charge upon God, it is meerly a miſtake in them; for it is not thus deferred out of want of kindneſs to the perſevering Chriſtians, but out of abundance of patience and long-ſufferance to the worſt, and an earneſt deſire that they may all amend and be delivered, without which amendment, whenſoever this coming ſhall be, all are infallibly deſtroyed: ſee Act. 3. 19. Note a.

10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in which the heavens ſhall paſs away † with a great noiſe, and the elements † ſhall melt with fervent heat, and the earth alſo, and the works that are therein ſhall be * burnt up.]

† being on fire ſhall be diſſolved * conſumed κα]ακαή-σε)

10. But this judgment of Chriſt ſo remarkable on the Jews ſhall now ſhortly come, the greater part of it burnt, and that very indiſcernibly, (ſee Luke 17. 20. 1 Theſſ. 5. 2.) and the temple ſhall be ſuddenly deſtroyed, and the city and people utterly conſumed: ſee Note d. and Mat. 24. 30. and Act. 2 19, 20.

11. Seeing then that all † theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs?]

† theſe ſhall πάν]ων

11. Seeing then this deſtruction ſhall thus involve all, and now approacheth ſo near, what an engagement doth this lay upon us to live the moſt pure ſtrict lives that ever men lived?

12. Looking for and † haſting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat.]

† haſtning the coming σπεύδοντας

12. Looking for the coming of Chriſt for our deliverance, and by our Chriſtian lives quickning and haſtning God to delay it no longer; (ſee v. 9.) that coming of his, I ſay, which as it ſignifies great mercy to us, ſo it ſignifies very ſharp deſtruction to the whole Jewiſh ſtate, ſee Note d.

13. * Nevertheleſs we, according to his promiſe, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs:]

* But δὲ

13. Inſtead of which we look for a new, a Chriſtian ſtate, in which all proviſion is made by Chriſt for righteouſneſs to inhabit, according to the promiſe of Chriſt, concerning the purity that Chriſt ſhould plant in the Evangelical ſtate, ſee Note d. and Rev. 21. 1. and Note a.

14. Wherefore, beloved, ſeeing that ye look for ſuch things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without ſpot and blameleſs:]

14. This therefore being your expectation, you muſt in reaſon uſe all diligence to keep your ſelves from all pollution, ſpot or blemiſh, from indulging to any of the carnal invitations that are now ſoliciting you, and ſo to continue till this coming of his, that you may then be found acceptable before him, and that then you may reap the profit of it, that all may be proſperous with you:

15. And account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord is † ſalvation; even as our beloved brother Paul alſo, according to the wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you;]

† or deliverance σωτη-ρίαν

15. And reſolve that the end of God's delaying this judgment, this execution ſo long, hath been (ſee v. 9.) on purpoſe to bring in and increaſe the number of convert Jews, thoſe to whom this deliverance is promiſed, according as S. Paul hath alſo ſaid, Rom. 2. 4, 5. and eſpecially Rom. 11. to which this place ſeems to refer, (ſee the ſum of that Chapter at the concluſion of the Paraphraſe of it.)

16. * As alſo in all his Epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things, † [b] in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood; which they that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo the other ſcriptures, unto their own deſtruction.]

* or, in all his Epiſtles, for the K.'s MS. leaves out ὡς καὶ † among which things ſome are hard --- ἐν οἷς ἔστι δυσνόητά τινα, but the K.'s MS. reads ἐν αἷς referring to Epiſtles.

16. And indeed in moſt, if not in all his Epiſtles, hath he ſaid ſomewhat of this matter, concerning this famous day of vengeance on the obdurate Jews, and deliverance of the faithful, and deferring that day of deſtruction on the former, on purpoſe (v. 15.) to gather in as many of the latter as he could. So Rom. 9. 29, 33. Rom. 10. 8, 9, 10, &c. Rom. 11. 5. Rom. 13. 11, 12. 1 Cor. 1. 7, 8. and chap. 3. 13. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. and chap. 5. 1, 2, 3, 9. and 2 Theſſ. 1. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. and chap. 2. 1, 2, 3, 8. and 1 Tim. 4. 1. and chap. 6. 14. In which matter ſome things there are concealed by God purpoſely from the knowledge of men and angels, as the punctual time of the coming of it, &c. from whence ſome unskilful unſetled Chriſtians have taken occaſion to fall off from the faith of Chriſt, and to ruin themſelves by ſo doing. This they do by deductions from ſome places of Scripture, wreſted by them (as it is ordinary with them to wreſt and diſtort the writings of the prophets, &c.) but it is through their ignorance and ungroundedneſs on the Chriſtian faith that they do ſo.

17. Ye therefore, beloved, ſeeing ye know theſe things before, beware leſt ye alſo being led away * with the error of the wicked, fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs.]

* by the ſeduction of abominable men τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ

17. You therefore, my brethren, whom I have thus timely warned and inſtructed, ought to make this prudent uſe of my admonitions, to take all care that ye be not inſnared by the filthy unnatural practices of the Gnoſticks (ſee Note on Jude b.) and ſo apoſtatize from the faith.

18. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

18. But daily increaſe in the true profeſſion of the Goſpel, and in the knowledge and practice of the pure doctrine (in oppoſition to the Gnoſticks knowledge falſly ſo called, 1 Tim. 6. 20) delivered to us by Chriſt our eternal God and bleſſed Saviour, who muſt be for ever praiſed by us. Amen.

Annotations on Chap. III.

a. ἐμπαῖκ]ῶν

V. 3. Scoffers] Ἐμπαῖκ]ῶν ſcorners here, and Jude 18. is anſwerable to the Hebrew לֵצִים, very frequent in the Old Teſtament, which denotes the higheſt degree of defection from and renouncing of piety: ſo Pſal. 1. 1. of the three degrees of ungodly men the לֵיצִים irriſores, ſcoffers or ſcorners, are the laſt. By theſe therefore are fitly here noted the Chriſtians, which at this time in great numbers fell off to the Gnoſtick-hereſie, and by ſo doing complyed and joined with the perſecuting Jews, and fell into all the villany in the world, expreſs'd here by κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας αὐτῶν ἐπιθυμίας πορευόμενοι, walking, that is, going on habitually, as in a courſe, according to their own deſires, or, (as when there was no King in Iſrael) every one doing that which was right in his own eyes, without any reſtraint of law, of nature, or Chriſt, &c. of theſe S. Jude ſaith, that the Apoſtles of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt had foretold they ſhould come in the laſt time; by the laſt time, or days, meaning there and here, the time immediately preceding the deſtruction of the Jews, (as hath been often ſhewed.) And ſo as Chriſt had foretold Mat. 24. 11. that at that point of time many falſe prophets ſhould ariſe, and deceive many, and again that many ſhould be ſcandalized, or fall off from Chriſt, v. 10. and the love of many, that is, their zeal to the faith of Chriſt, grow cold, v. 12. ſo the Apoſtles of Chriſt in their preachings and in their Epiſtles had alſo frequently foretold this, 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. that this coming or day of Chriſt, v. 1, 2. was not to be ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία πρῶτον, unleſs the apoſtaſie firſt come, this apoſtaſie of the many Chriſtians to the foul Gnoſtick-hereſie, and v. 5. οὐ μνημονεύετε, do you not remember that when I was with you I told you theſe things? So 1 Tim. 4. 1. the Spirit ſaith expreſly, that is, Chriſt and his Apoſtles by their prophetick ſpirit every where, that in the laſt times ἀποστήσονταί τινες τῆς πίστεως ſome ſhall apoſtatize from the faith, προσέχοντες πνεύμασι πλάνοις giving ear to impoſtor-ſpirits, the very interpretation of Chriſt's πλανήσουσι πολλούς, that theſe falſe teachers ſhould deceive many, and theſe deſcribed in the following words, as thoſe that had caſt off all laws, forbidding to marry, &c. and ſo walking after their own unnatural luſts. And to theſe he refers again 2 Tim. 3. 1. But know this, &c. By all which it appears, that theſe that were thus foreſeen that they ſhould fall off at this time, and ſo mentioned here, v. 2. were the Gnoſtick heretieks, and

πνεῦμα ῥητῶς λέγει ἀποστήσονταί τινες πνεύμασι πλάνα

πορευόμενοι κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας

ἐμπαῖκ]ῶν χατὰ χάος

and thoſe that were ſeduced by them; and ſo this weight there will be in the word πρῶτον, firſt, that as theſe were to apoſtatize thus before that coming of Chriſt to the deſtruction of the Jews, ſo now in the diſcourſe of it, begun purpoſely v. 2. this was the firſt thing to be ſet down; and that is the full meaning of Τῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες, Knowing this firſt.

τῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες

b. Ἀφ' ἧς

V. 4. Since] Ἀφ' ἧς, à qua, or à quo, may be taken in reſpect of time, as an Epocha from whence the writer takes his riſe, from ſuch or ſuch a time, excluding what was before, and including all ſince. But it may alſo refer to matters as well as to time, and then it notes no more than the excluding or excepting that which is named, and including all that is not named, and will then beſt be rendred, unleſs it be, or except that. That this muſt be the notion of it here, and not the former, is evident by what follows, that all things remain in the ſame manner from the beginning of the creation, where the creation is an Epocha of a far longer date than that of the death of the Fathers. Beſides it would be hard to define what fathers are here meant, if that were the meaning of it: For it cannot be appliable ſo to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, the fathers of the people of the Jews; for to confute this ſpeech of theſe ſcoffers, the Apoſtle draws his proof from the times of the Flood, which was long before them, which would not be a good way of arguing againſt them, if they had dated their obſervation no farther than the times of Abraham; for they might well acknowledge a change in the Deluge, though none ſince Abraham. But in the other notion the matter is clear, From the creation of the world, ſay they, there hath been no change in any material thing, ſo as to be fit to deter men from complying with the Jews, for the avoiding of perſecutions, ſo as to make men fear that Chriſt will now come in any eminent manner to deſtroy the Jews or Gnoſticks, or to perſevere in hope that he will deliver the perſecuted Chriſtians out of their hands. One change they acknowledge there hath been in the world, ſome men have ſlept with their fathers, and others have lived in their ſtead, a ſucceſſion of fathers and ſons to repleniſh the world, men have not been immortal, the fathers have died, and given way to their children: But except this (which is an unconſiderable matter, not pertinent to the point in hand) all things elſe, ſay they, have continued in the ordinary conſtant courſe, without any diſcernible interpoſing of God's providence to puniſh one, or to relieve another. This ſure is the Atheiſt's objection, occaſioned by the delay of Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the Jews. And this it is which is punctually confuted in the following verſes; and ſo that muſt in all reaſon be the notation of ἀφ' ἧς which is moſt reconcilable with this.

c. Θέλοντες

V. 5. Willingly] The word θέλοντες ſeems here to be taken in a ſenſe not ordinary in other places, for being of opinion or affirming, perhaps with this addition of aſſerting it magiſterially, without any reaſon rendred for it, but a Sic volo, &c. So I will, I command, my will is my reaſon. Thus in Latin we are wont to uſe it, Qui hoc volunt, they that will this, for, they that are of this opinion; and thus ἃ βέλομαι 2 Cor. 1. 17. the things that I will, that is, which I teach, or affirm. See Note c. on that Chapter. And ſo τῦτο θέλοντες, they that will this, are they that are of this mind, that affirm this.

Ib. Earth ſtanding out of the water] The meaning of this fifth verſe will be beſt diſcern'd by conſidering it as preparative to the ſixth: For the one thing that was here to be affirmed and proved for the confuting of that Atheiſtical aphoriſm, v. 4. that, There was no ſuch thing as puniſhment inflicted on wicked men, or deliverance for the godly, to be expected from any overruling power of heaven, all things going on in a conſtant courſe from the beginning of the world to that time, was this, that the whole world was once drowned for the ſins of the inhabitants, and that is ſaid v. 6. But to prepare for this, here is, in this verſe, a deſcription of the frame of this lower world in the firſt creation, as it was formed πρὸ τῦ Θεῦ λόγῳ, by the word of God, that word by which he ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light; let there be a firmament, and there was ſo, and God ſaw that it was good, that is, all that he did was deſigned for ſuch uſes as he in his wiſdom thought agreeable. And that is thus deſcribed, ἦσαν οἱ οὐρανοὶ ἔκπαλαι there were heavens from of old, that is, in the beginning the heavens were created, and ſo the earth alſo, Gen. 1. 1. the earth ſo formed that, whenſoever God pleaſed, it might be drowned without creating any new thing. For thus it was framed; The very globe of the earth conſiſted of a great quantity of waters, called the abyſs or deep, Gen. 1. 1. ſo great as to cover the face of the earth, till God put it into one place, that dry land might appear, Gen. 1. 9. And this is it that now makes the whole body of the ocean, and all other rivers in the world, and beſides great quantities of water in the bowels of the earth, breaking forth in fountains, that flow perpetually, and maintaining with ſupplies all the rivers and ſeas in the world. And this may fitly own the expreſſion that is here uſed of the globe of the earth, that it is ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ δι' ὕδατος συνεστῶσα made up of water, hath abundance of water in its compaſs, which is the water which Gen. 1. 7. is called the water under the רקיע or expanſion, that is, under the body of the air, and ſo makes up, as the Philoſophers ſay, one globe with the earth. And ſo this part of the frame of the earth did competently prepare it for drowning, it being evident, that there was ſo much water in that globe of the earth as, till it was put into receptacles and cavities, it cover'd the face of the earth, no dry land appeared, Gen. 1. 9. But beſide this, there was great ſtore of waters in the clouds, which is called the waters above the expanſion, Gen. 1. 7. the lower region of the air being between them and the earth, and when God is pleaſed to looſen thoſe clouds, which is called opening the windows of heaven, then the rain falls and adds to that ſtore of waters which was in the globe of the earth already. And theſe clouds encompaſſing the earth on every ſide, the earth is here alſo ſaid to be συνεστῶσα δι' ὕδατος, paced in the midſt of the waters, for ſo the Prepoſition διὰ by is ſet to render the בתוך in the midſt, and ſo 'tis uſed by this Author, 1 Pet. 3. 20. διεσώθησαν δι' ὕδατος, they were ſaved in the midſt of water, and ſo σωθήσεται ὡς διὰ πυρός, he ſhall be ſaved, but ſo as in the midſt of fire, 1 Cor. 3. 15. So in Herodotus διὰ νήσων is among, or in the midſt of, Iſlands. And ſo this part of the frame being added to the former, the clouds and cataracts encompaſſing the earth, and impendent over it, the earth was aſcertain'd to be drown'd, and ſwallow'd up, whenſoever God ſhould let looſe theſe cataracts upon it, as in the Deluge he did, Gen. 7. 11. and ſo there is the foundation of the δι' ὧν by which, v. 6. this frame and diſpoſition of God's, that the earth ſhould have ſo much water in its own boſom, and ſuch clouds of water encompaſſing it, was the means by which the old world being drowned by water periſhed: and ſo this is the clear meaning of the place.

c. οἱ οὐρανοὶ καὶ γῆ

V. 7. Heavens and the earth] The phraſe οἱ οὐρανοὶ καὶ ἡ γῆ the heavens and the earth, are here ſet to ſignifie the whole compages of this Sublunary world, and all the creatures that are in it, all that was deſtroyed by the Flood, and is now ſecured from periſhing ſo again, and is reſerved for fire, by which it is (by perpetual tradition) believed that the world ſhall finally be deſtroyed. The Hebrews have no one word to ſignifie this, but ordinarily uſe שמים וארץ the heavens and earth. And ſo the heavens, and elements, and earth, v. 10, and 12. which would literally denote the world, ſignifie figuratively the whole city of Jeruſalem, Temple and palace, towers and buildings of the city, not one ſignified by one, another by another, but all by all together, and proportionably to that, the new heavens and new earth are a Chriſtian people, ver. 13. And ſo 'tis ordinary in other expreſſions in that language; as, his body, his fleſh, and his bones, Eph. 5. 30. ſignifies him, and no more: and ſo in other authors, the body and the ſoul are ſet ſeverally, when yet they ſignifie nothing diſtinct, but the whole man together. See A. Gellius, l. 3. c. 1. And ſo the evening and the morning ſignifie the natural day: ſee Note on Mat. 12. n. So the Elders, high Prieſts and Scribes every where in the Goſpels, ſignifie the Sanhedrim; and ſo in like manner the phraſe Father and mother, and wives and children, and fields, &c. ſignifies this one thing, poſſeſſions or comforts of life, and muſt ſo be rendred in the groſs, and not in the retail, or elſe the true meaning of ſome places in the New Teſtament will not be intelligible. As Mar. 10. 30. when 'tis ſaid

σῶμα, σάρξ, ὀστέα

οἶκοι, καὶ ἀδελφοὶ, καὶ μητέρες

that he that leaves father and mother, &c. ſhall receive an hundred-fold more in this life, houſes and brethren and ſiſters and mothers: for 'tis clear enough that he ſhall not receive an hundred mothers; but as all theſe ſeverals put together denote the comforts and poſſeſſions of this life, ſo it is to be expected that the promiſe of God will be performed to thoſe that part with any thing for Chriſt's ſake. See Note on Epheſ. 5. h. and Col. 1. c.

f. ῥοιζηδὸν

V. 10. With a great noiſe] Ῥοιζῇ, διαὶ πνοῆς, ὁρμῇ, τρέχει· Ῥοιζηδὸν, σφοδρῶς, μὴ ἦχος, ſaith Phavorinus: ſo that it ſignifies ſwiftly as well as with a noiſe. And that the former is the meaning of it here, is probable, becauſe 'tis added to the coming of that day as a thief, unexpectedly, and in order to that is this of ſwiftneſs, not that other notion of μὴ ἦχος with noiſe; for thieves in the night do not willingly do ſo, or if they do, loſe the advantage of the night, that is, the ſecrecy of it.

g. καυσούμενα λυθήσονται

Ib. Melt with fervent heat] The deſtruction of Judæa is here, ver. 10, and 12. deſcribed by diſſolution, or conſumption, by fire, and ſo Iſa. 9. 5. and 66. 15, 16. and Mal. 4. 1. and Joel 2. 3. 30. where that deſtruction is deſcribed; ſo 2 Theſſ. 1. 8. In flaming fire taking vengeance (which that it belongs to that matter, ſee the Context of that place, and Note b.) ſo Heb. 10. 27. πυρὸς ζῆλος a burning of fire to conſume the ἀντικείμενοι, all that obdurately ſtand out againſt Chriſt, and that belonging to this matter alſo, as will appear by comparing v. 25. and v. 37. ſee Note a. on that Chapter; and ſo perhaps 1 Cor. 3. 13, 15. And this either firſt, figuratively, after the manner of Prophetick ſtyle, wherein fire, and burning, and melting ſignifies deſtruction and utter deſolation: or elſe ſecondly, in relation to the Zelots, and that πύρωσις raiſed by them, the fearful combuſtion and conflagration within the nation and city, the fire of ſedition and contention, which was ſo great an inſtrument of deſtruction among them, killing vaſt multitudes at once, Joſeph. de Bel. Jud. lib. 7. c. 14. rifling the palace and all the wealth of the city (being at that time carried thither) and many other particulars of that kind in that ſtory: or elſe thirdly in reference to the exact truth of the fact (of which this is a literal deſcription) the burning of Jeruſalem mentioned by Joſephus, l. 7. c. 14. where 'tis ſaid of the Romans that they fired all unto Silva; and again in the ſame Chapter that the Sicarii, the other faction in the city, contrary to the Zelots, got into vaults, from whence they fired the city more than the Romans, and murthered them that eſcaping the flames fled into the caves; and again, c. 16. The Romans being entred fired houſes, and, ſaith he, many things that were fired were quenched with the blood of the ſlain, with which the ſtreets of the city flowed; and again, All the night long the fire encreaſed, and in the morning Sept. 8th. all was on fire, and c. 17. they fired the outward parts of the city. Then for the burning of the Temple particularly, that is ſet down l. 3. c. 9. firſt of the doors, where the ſilver plate being melted firſt, the flame quickly fired the wood, and from thence increaſed to the next porch, and that day and all the next night the fire encreaſed, till Titus cauſed the army to quench it: But as it follows, the ſentence of God had already determined that it ſhould be conſumed with fire; and ſo it was on Auguſt 10. of which he pronounceth, Now the fatal day was come after many years, the phraſe ſo uſual in the New Teſtament, the day, and the coming of that day. And c. 19. a ſouldier without command caſt a firebrand into the golden gate, and preſently it ſet a flaming; and when Titus came violently in to quench it, no body would hear him, but cried the more to ſet it on fire, and neither his commands nor intreaties would ſerve turn, but it was (abſolutely againſt his will) burnt down, and no help for it, ſaith he, becauſe the deſtinies had ſo determined, that is, the counſel and decree of God, teſtified by predictions. What is here thus expreſs'd by S. Peter, is ordinarily conceived to belong to the end of the world, and by others applied to the end of this world, and the beginning of the Millennium or thouſand years. And ſo, as S. Peter here ſaith, v. 16. many other places in S. Paul's Epiſtles, and in the Goſpel, eſpecially Mat. 24. are miſtaken and wreſted. That it doth not belong to either of thoſe, but to this fatal day of the Jews, ſufficiently appears by the purport of the whole Epiſtle, (ſee Note a. on the Title of it, and on ch. 1. Note e. and g.) which is to arm them with conſtancy and perſeverance till that day come, and particularly in this Chapter, to confute them who object againſt the truth of Chriſt's predictions and reſolve it ſhould not come at all; againſt whom he here oppoſes the certainty, the ſpeedineſs, and terribleneſs of its coming. That which hath given occaſion to thoſe other common miſtakes, is eſpecially the hideouſneſs of thoſe judgments which fell upon that people of the Jews, beyond all that ever before are related to have fallen on them, or indeed on any other people; which made it neceſſary for the Prophets which were to deſcribe it, (and who uſe tropes and figures, and not plain expreſſions, to ſet down their predictions) to expreſs it by theſe high phraſes of the paſſing away, and diſſolving, of heaven, and earth, and elements, &c. which ſounding very tragically are miſtaken for the great, final diſſolution of the world. What is firſt literally, and then figuratively meant by the heavens and earth, hath been ſaid Note d. As for the addition of the στοιχεῖα elements annex'd to the στοιχεῖα heavens, that is no more than will bear due proportion to the ἔργα ἐν αὐτῇ the works therein, which are join'd with ἡ γῆ the earth. By one is meant all that is in the earth, the creatures that inhabit there; and by the other is meant all that is in the heavens, צבאם the hoſt of them, Gen. 2. 1. for ſo the Hebrew word, coming from צבא a military word, for ſtanding, or moving, in rank and order, is anſwerable to the Greek στοιχεῖα, which comes from στείχω, which bears the ſame ſenſe. And ſo Wiſdom 7. 17. στοιχεῖα elements are in the Chaldee, cited by * Rabbi Moſes ben Nachman, מזלות Planets, or ſigns in heaven, which are ordinarily call'd the hoſt of heaven; and ſo Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 1. uſes ἡγεμονικὰ στοιχεῖα for the Sun, Moon, &c. which are appointed by God for the increaſe of fruits, and changes of ſeaſons. So in Theophilus ad Autol. the Sun and Moon, &c. are oft call'd στοιχεῖα elements: Only the word heavens being an equivocal word, uſed either for the ſuperior heavens, whether Empyreal, or Æthereal, or for the ſublunary heavens, the air, (as the word World is either the whole compages of the ſuperior and inferior, or elſe only of the ſublunary lower world) we may here reſolve, that the ἡγεμονικὰ and στοιχεῖα, heavens, and hoſt or elements thereof, are literally the ſublunary aereal heavens and all that is therein, clouds and meteors, &c. fowls and flying creatures; and ſo fit to join with the earth, and the works that are therein, &c. and both together prophetically, or figuratively, to ſignify the whole people of the Jews, which are ſometimes call'd οἰκουμένη the habitable world, Iſ. 10. 23. (compared with Rom. 9. 28.) and 13. 5, 9. and 24. 1. and Luc. 21. 26. and Rom. 10. 18. and, which is all one, the heavens and earth, Hag. 2. 6, 21. Iſ. 51. 15, 16. and c. 34. 2, 4, 5. See Note d. Or if it be underſtood of the Æthereal heavens, and the Planets or ſigns therein, it will then be parallel to the Sun, Moon and Stars, Mat. 24. 29. (agreeable to the Prophetick ſtyle Iſ. 13, 10. and 34. 4. Ezech. 32. 7. Joel 2. 10, 31. and 3. 15.) and ſo again will fitly expreſs the city and Temple, the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical ſtate of the Jews, or the ruling part of both, the Prieſts and the Sanhedrin, as the people are decyphered by ἡ γῆ the earth, and the works therein; and all theſe together are the whole nation, the πανολεθρία, or total final deſtruction whereof is here deſcribed.

V. 16. In which] In this place the King's MS. reading ἐν αἷς in which in the Feminine gender (which if it be true, then it muſt refer to the Epiſtles fore-mentioned) but other Copies, and the printed ones generally reading ἐν οἷς in the Neuter, which cannot agree with Epiſtles, but with περὶ τούτων of theſe things, it is not certain which reading muſt be adhered to. That which ſeems to be moſt probable is, that the ordinary reading ſhould be retained, ἐν οἷς, &c. and that render'd, among which things ſome are hard to be underſtood, &c. If this be the ſenſe, then Saint Peter doth not at all give this character of any parts of S. Paul's Epiſtles, that they are δυσνόητα hard to be underſtood, but that among thoſe things (of which S. Peter is now a treating, and of which, ſaith he, S. Paul hath written in all his Epiſtles, and generally the Prophets of the Old, and the Apoſtles of the New Teſtament, v. 2.) ἔστι δυσνόητα τινα ſome are hard to be underſtood, &c. What the things here ſpoken of are,

hath been cleared by the Paraphraſe of this, and the former Epiſtle, viz. in general, the coming of Chriſt, to deſtroy his crucifiers and deliver the pious Chriſtians out of their perſecutions. This is apparently ſpoken of by the Prophets, and by Chriſt, and by the Apoſtles, both in their preaching (ſee Note a. on the Title of the Epiſtle to the Romans) and in their Epiſtles, written but a little before it was to come. That it was ſo long deferred, was matter of ſome trouble to ſome, and objection againſt the truth of theſe predictions, v. 4. to which this Apoſtle here anſwers, v. 9. that the reaſon why God doth make ſome ſtay in this matter, is that men may have time to repent, and reform, and eſcape this vengeance, which when it comes, will come ſo ſuddenly and unexpectedly as to ſurprize many that look not for it, v. 10. and that he repeats again, v. 15. bidding them count the long-ſuffering of the Lord (that is, this deferring his judgments) ſalvation, that is, a means deſigned by God to bring men to repentance. And for this particular it is that he cites S. Paul, as concurring with him in this account of the reaſon of Chriſt's delaying his coming, adding only this of S. Paul, that in all his Epiſtles he hath ſpoken of theſe things, that is, ſaid a great deal concerning this coming of Chriſt. Having gone thus far, he paſſeth his obſervation of the then preſent temper of men, and behaviour in this matter, that there were ſome giddy, unſetled Chriſtians, which upon occaſion of ſome things not ſo clearly revealed by thoſe that have foretold this coming of Chriſt, have fallen into pernicious errors. What things thoſe were which are here ſaid to be δυσνόητα hard to be underſtood, and what dangerous errors drawn from thence, will perhaps be hardly defined by us at this diſtance. That Cerinthus, by miſunderſtanding ſome of theſe predictions, came to think that Chriſt ſhould have a temporal kingdom upon earth, where men ſhould enjoy all carnality, ſee Note on Rev. 2. a. and he and his followers may be thought to be theſe ἀστήκτοι here, the unſtable Chriſtians that diſtorted theſe predictions. Or becauſe it is added of the ſame men, that they do diſtort other ſcriptures alſo to their own deſtruction, it will not ſo fitly be reſtrained to Cerinthus, but more generally be ſpoken of the Gnoſticks, who by a ſtrange liberty which they uſed in expounding the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament (calling it γνῶσις knowledge of myſtical ſenſes) brought in moſt damnable doctrines of uncleanneſs, &c. And theſe ſure are the men here ſpoken of, called unſtable, becauſe they fell off from the truth, and ἐμπαῖκται ſcoffers, v. 3. as that notes Apoſtates (ſee Note on Jude 18.) And having thus diſcovered who the men were, it will be more poſſible by the ſame clew to diſcover what the things were which are by S. Peter called δυσνόητα, hard to be underſtood. I ſhall here offer my conjecture. Our Saviour, when he foretels this his coming very particularly, Mat. 24. and defines the time ſo far, that it ſhall be certainly within the compaſs of that generation, v. 34. (and in the life-time of ſome that were there preſent, Mat. 16. 28.) yet for the preciſe time of it, the day and hour, he pronounceth clearly that no man, nor angel, v. 36. (no nor the Son himſelf, Mar. 13. 32.) knows of that, that is, none but the Father. Accordingly he anſwers the Apoſtles Act. 1. 7. demanding whether he would then (after his reſurrection) reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael, It is not for you to know the times and the ſeaſons which the Father hath kept in his own power; that is, the day and hour, in Matthew, the punctual time of this kingdom of God, this coming of Chriſt, God the Father had kept ſecret, revealed it neither to man nor Angel, neither ſhould it be revealed to any. This I ſuppoſe is the meaning of 1 Theſſ. 5. 1, 2. that of the times and ſeaſons, that is, of the very time which God in his wiſdom had choſen for this remarkable coming of Chriſt upon his crucifiers, he needed not write, it being ſufficiently known that it was to come as a thief in the night, that is, not to be diſcerned beforehand. In which place, that which is χρόνοι καὶ καιροὶ times and ſeaſons, v. 1. is ἡμέρα κυρίου the day of the Lord, v. 2. juſt as Act. 1. 7. the times and ſeaſons are all one with the day and hour, Mat. 24. 36. and ſo in ſtead of no man's knowing of it Mat. 24. and God's reſerving it in his own power, ſo that it is not for them to know it, Act. 1. 7. is there, the coming of that day as a thief in the night; by which may be concluded, that that phraſe of that days coming as a thief in the night, is ſet to ſignifie the uncertainty when that day would be. And ſo Chriſt explains that phraſe, if the good man of the houſe knew in what watch the thief would come, &c. intimating that the coming of a thief is ſuppoſed to be unknown to him that is to be robb'd by him. Now it is apparent that this ſaying of Chriſt's, in this ſenſe, is here laid as the foundation of the diſcourſe and words which here we are endeavouring to explicate, But the day of the Lord ſhall come as a thief in the night, v. 10. that is, But the punctual time of this coming is unknown, upon which he builds all watching, and caution, and continual expectance, v. 12. And having added what advantage the faithful Chriſtians ſhall receive by this means, peaceable days of ſerving Chriſt, expreſs'd by new heavens and new earth, that is, a new world, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs, which therefore he adviſeth all to wait for, (for that is the meaning of προσδοκῶμεν, not προσδοκῦμεν, let us (not we do) expect them, and depend on them according to his promiſe) he then gives them an account why 'tis thus long deferr'd, and adviſeth all to make the right uſe of it, make it their ſeaſon of repentance, v. 15. which being confirmed by S. Paul's authority, he hath no more to add on this matter but this, that the objection of the Apoſtates, v. 3. againſt the truth of Chriſt's promiſe of coming in this manner, was founded only in the obſcurity and unknownneſs of ſome particulars in this matter, which very probably ſignifies that profeſs'd unintelligibleneſs of the punctual time of Chriſt's coming, which becauſe no body would or could tell them when it would be, therefore they will not wait for it in purity and ſobriety, and practice of ſuch Chriſtian vertues as were required to prepare them for it when it ſhould come, but walk after their own luſts, v. 3. follow their own ſenſual courſes, and perſuade themſelves that it will never come, that no ſuch judgment is likely to come at all upon them, and ſo that day comes upon them unawares, and they periſh in it with the crucifiers; and ſo are fitly ſaid to detort theſe δυσνόητα, the uncertainty of the punctual time (and ſome other ſuch particulars) to their own deſtruction, to periſh remarkably by this means. This is no improbable meaning of theſe words, compared with v. 3. from whence the riſe of this diſcourſe was taken. And if it be here objected, that this particular of the day and hour was more than δυσνόητον, hard to be underſtood, God having kept it a perfect ſecret to himſelf, and ſo that this cannot be it which is here ſpoken of, I anſwer, that words of this nature are not ſo ſtrictly to be taken as to be thought to ſignifie no more than hard. For when it is ſaid of him that truſts in riches, that it is hard for him, to enter into the kingdom of God, that which is expreſs'd by δύσκολον hard, Mar. 10. 24. is preſently interpreted to be impoſſible, not only by the matter which is ſuch, but alſo by the ſimilitude of the Camel entring through the eye of a needle, v. 25. So when the Diſciples complain of an hard ſaying, Joh. 6. 60. it follows, who can hear it? that is, no man can poſſibly be ſuppoſed to eat the ſon of man's fleſh, and ſo hard is impoſſible there alſo, that is, morally ſo, that which cannot be done without great impiety: and ſo δυσνόητα here in the forementioned interpretation are not abſolutely impoſſible to be known, becauſe God may, though he will not, reveal it; but which could not be underſtood, ſuppoſing that God (as Chriſt had ſaid) would keep it in his own power, and reveal it to no man.

THE [a] First EPISTLE GENERAL OF † JOHN.

OF the Author of this Epiſtle, that it was John the beloved diſciple, the ſame that wrote the Goſpel and the Revelation, there hath never been any queſtion in the Church of God, which hath from all times ἀναμφισβήτως, without any doubt, received it into the Canon. That he begins not, as the other Apoſtles (all ſave only the Author to the Hebrews) had done all their Epiſtles, with his name, and expreſſion of thoſe to whom he wrote by way of ſalutation, may moſt fitly be interpreted by his cuſtomary practice in his other writings, who in the Goſpel ſcarce ever names himſelf, but chuſes to uſe ſome circumlocution, as, he that ſaw, the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, he that lay leaning on Jeſus's boſom, and the like, and begins his diſcourſe without one word of formality, or title, or preface, which all the other Evangeliſts had uſed. In what year of Chriſt this Epiſtle was written, is no otherwiſe certain than by what may be collected from ſome paſſages in it; as cap. 2. 18. where it ſeems to have been a little before the great deſtruction which befel the Jews, called by other Apoſtles the day of the Lord, and the laſt day, but by him ἐσχάτη ὥρα, the laſt hour, or part of that day; and again the true light already ſhining, c. 2. 8. that is the Chriſtian bright ſtate turning out the Moſaical ſhadows, or typical ſervices, which was finally to be done at the deſtruction of the Temple, and now already was done in ſome part. And the ſame again appears by the Ἀντίχριστοι, many counterfeit Chriſts and falſe Prophets, that, in that v. 18. he ſaith were then among them, ſuch as Chriſt tells us were to be the immediate forerunners of that deſtruction, Mat. 24. And accordingly the whole buſineſs of the Epiſtle is to encourage them, chap. 1. 4. to confirm the faith and conſtancy of the Chriſtian profeſſors, who were now ſolicited vehemently by theſe ſeducers, and the Church torn aſunder in every place by the Gnoſticks, (the followers of Simon) who now denyed the reality of Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, and would no longer confeſs a crucified Chriſt, or venture any perſecutions for that confeſſion. That is was called antiently the Epiſtle to the Parthians, is affirmed by S. Auguſtin, meaning thereby thoſe converted Jews which lived beyond Euphrates, of which there were great multitudes, ſaith Joſephus, Ant. l. 18. c. 12. And to them it is not improbable it was written.

CHAP. I.

Paraphraſe.

1. THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled * of the word of life,]

1. That which from the beginning of the world was in the decree and purpoſe of God (and was afterward foretold by him) but by us the Apoſtles of Chriſt heard from God ſpeaking from heaven, and really beheld and looked on by us, known and teſtified by all our ſenſes, concerning Chriſt and the Goſpel of Chriſt, ſhewing us the way to life eternal,

* concerning περὶ

2. (†For the life was manifeſted, and we have * ſeen it, and bear witneſs, and ſhew unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifeſted unto us)]

2. (Which Chriſt and which Goſpel were revealed unto us viſibly and diſcernibly, of which I can teſtifie as an eye-witneſs, and do therefore now declare to you Chriſt the fountain of eternal life, who from all eternity continued with the Father, and at laſt became man, and was clearly revealed to us)

3. That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye alſo may † have fellowſhip with us: * and truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt.]

3. What, I ſay, we know thus aſſuredly, that we make known to you, that you may partake with us in it, and that participation be of all others the moſt bleſſed deſirable participation, (ſee Act. 2. c.) a participation of knowledge, and grace, and immortality, and that with God himſelf through Chriſt Jeſus.

† partake with us. κοινωνίαν ἔχητε * and our partnerſhip be ᾖ ἡ κοινωνία δὲ ἡμετέρα

4. And theſe things we write unto you, that your joy may be † full.]

4. This Epiſtle and, in it, this teſtimony do I write unto you, for your encouragement in the profeſſion of the Goſpel, which many Gnoſticks and falſe Chriſts are apt to ſhake you out of.

5. This then is the meſſage which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is [a] light, and in him is no darkneſs at all.]

5. And this is the ſum of the Goſpel preached by Chriſt, which we now teſtifie unto you, that all purity is required of you, that all God's commands are pure, and that there is nothing which hath any degree of impurity in it which God in Chriſt doth not now abominate, but on the other ſide, a far greater purity now required than before, which may ſufficiently arm you againſt all the deceits of the Gnoſticks, which under the notion of Chriſtian liberty are apt to lead you into all the impurity in the world.

* partnerſhip κοινωνίαν

6. If we ſay that we have * fellowſhip with him and walk in darkneſs, we lie, and do not the truth:]

6. If we ſay we are partakers of his purity, or have any likeneſs or conformity with him, and live in any impure courſe, as the Gnoſticks do, we neither ſpeak nor act according to the Goſpel, which prohibits and interdicts all ſuch ways as they daily and avowedly practice;

† or we have partnerſhip with him, for though in the K.'s MS. there be here a lacuna, yet the ſpace is not large enough for ἀλλήλων, but fit for αὐτῷ, and this is agreeable with v. 6.

7. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, † we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.]

7. But if we live pure lives, as he is perfectly pure, then we partake with Chriſt of his graces, and reſemble him in his purity, (ſee v. 3. and v. 6.) and the death of Chriſt is beneficial (to us, who thus imitate his purity) to cleanſe us from all the guilt of paſt ſins, and preſent infirmities.

8. If we ſay that we have * no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us.]

8. All theſe mens pretenſions to perfection are a perfect cheating of themſelves. Whoſoever conceive, as the Gnoſticks do, (calling themſelves, The perfect, &c.) that ſuch actions as are done by them are reconcilable with perfection or innocence, they moſt miſerably deceive themſelves, and muſt know that they are ſo far from any ſtate of perfection, that they act quite contrary to the rule which the Goſpel gives for the regulating of mens lives.

9. If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs.]

9. The only way is to repent and acknowledge what we have done amiſs, and then God, having promiſed pardon to all humble penitents upon ſincere reformation, is obliged in fidelity and juſtice to make good this promiſe to you, to free you from all puniſhment of ſin; and no other courſe but this will render you capable of his mercy.

10. If we ſay that we have not ſinned, we [b] make him a liar, and his word is not in us.]

10. Nay, they that live ſuch lives as theſe men, and yet pretend to perfection, do not only lie, v. 6. deceive themſelves, v. 8. but proceed farther, and make God a liar, who having ſent Chriſt into the world to reveal his will, to give certain rules of life, to define what is now ſin, and what is not, hath univerſally defined ſuch actions as are committed by theſe pretenders to perfection, to be horrible and damning ſins; and therefore they that do thus, and yet thus pretend, give God the lie, and manifeſt how far they are from obeying his commands, living according to God's will.

Annotations on Chap. I.

a. φῶς σκότος

V. 5. Light] The word φῶς light is a figurative expreſſion to ſignifie the moſt perfect, immaculate purity; and σκότος darkneſs is directly the contrary, mixture of all impurity: The affirming of which concerning God, that he is perfect purity, without any mixture of impurity, is no ſuch ſtrange thing as that the Apoſtle ſhould introduce it with ſo much ceremony as here we ſee made uſe of, That which we have heard and ſeen, which we have looked on, and our hands have felt, v. 1. What we have ſeen, we declare, v. 3. and, This is that meſſage which we declare, v. 5. That which all this ſolemnity was thought fit to introduce, was certainly ſomewhat either doubted of and queſtioned by the doctrines, or oppoſed and reſiſted by the lives of thoſe to whom he writes. And that which ſeems moſt probable to be the full importance of it, is in the general to denote the great perfection of purity which is now commanded in the Chriſtian law, and more particularly the great obligation that lies upon Chriſtians not to make that profeſſion a pretence or excuſe for the favouring themſelves in any degree of liberty or impurity. Chriſt came certainly from God to declare his will unto us; that God is a God of all purity, and conſequently his commandments which Chriſt came to reveal (like himſelf) made up of ſevere rules of purity: And then how contrary to all piety and Chriſtianity muſt the Gnoſtick infuſions neceſſarily be, which allow and practiſe all impurities, and make them a ſpecial part of their religion, and call themſelves τέλειοι and γνωστικοὶ perfect and knowing men, beyond all others, and living in a ſink of all uncleanneſs, ſay they have not ſinned for all this, ver. 10?

b. Ψεύδην ποιοῦμεν αὐτὸν

V. 10. Make him a lyar] What it is to make God a lyar hath no great difficulty in it; it is certainly to deny the truth of that which God hath ſomewhere affirmed; and ſo 'tis uſed c. 5. 10. The greater queſtion is, wherein the truth of this affirmation here is founded, that if we ſay we have not ſinned, we thus deny the truth of what God hath affirm'd, or give God the lie. The beſt way of deciding this, will ſure be taken from the Context, where v. 6. the foundation of this ſpeech is laid. There it is, If we ſay we have fellowſhip or partnerſhip with God, and walk in darkneſs, we lie, and do not the truth. There certainly we may diſcern who are the we that are here ſpoken of, viz. not the Apoſtle, and the pious Chriſtians (for the firſt perſon doth not always ſignifie ſo, but is uſed to perſonate any other that the Apoſtle would ſpeak of: ſee Rom. 7. Note d.) but thoſe that are ſuppoſed to walk in darkneſs, that is, to go on in unchriſtian ſins, and yet to pretend partnerſhip with God, that is, to a ſtate of great innocence and perfection. Theſe are certainly the Gnoſtick-hereticks, whoſe character that is, to live in all carnality and uncharitableneſs, &c. and yet to pretend themſelves to be the moſt perfect men: Of thoſe he there ſaith, that they lie notoriouſly, their foul actions and pretenſions to perfection are very contrary, and they do not the truth, they live contrary to that rule of life which as Chriſtians they have received to live by. To theſe ſame perſons he proceeds, ver. 7. to tell the poſitive truth, contrary to their lie, that if they walk in the light, that is, live Chriſtian lives of purity and charity, then they may truly be ſaid to have partnerſhip with him, (as the King's MS. ſeems to have read αὐτῷ, and not ἀλλήλων, and as is moſt agreeable with v. 6.) that is, to be blameleſs, pious, perfect men; and then for any frailties, or forſaken ſins, the blood of Chriſt is accepted as a ſacrifice of expiation for ſuch. This is again ſaid (both in the former and latter part of it, ver. 8, 9.) but with ſome little change of the phraſe, which muſt be interpreted by analogy with the former. If we ſay, ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔχομεν we have not ſin, that is all one with the precedent, we have partnerſhip with him; for ſinleſneſs is that property of God's which they pretended to be communicated to them: and then though there be nothing in that verſe anſwerable to their walking in darkneſs, ver. 6. yet the perſons being ſtill ſuppoſed the ſame that are ſpoken of in both verſes, the impious carnal Gnoſticks, this of their wicked lives is ſuppoſed in the 8th verſe, having been already, ver. 6. ſufficiently expreſs'd: and ſo as of them, whoſe lives of carnality and pretenſions of perfection were ſo contrary, it had been affirmed, ver. 6. that they lie, and do not the truth; ſo in that 8th verſe, 'tis ſaid with little change, they deceive themſelves, and the truth is not in them, which only adds to the former the conſideration of their danger that they thus brought upon themſelves, they flattered themſelves to their ruin, whereas v. 9. If they would acknowledge their ſins and danger, and forſake them, and fly to God for pardon upon repentance, he having promiſed it to ſuch, would be faithful and juſt to forgive them their ſins, would deal with them according to his promiſe. And then follows v. 10. If we ſay that we have not ſinned (which is directly all one with, we have not ſin, v. 8. ſee Note on c. 3. 2.) that is, if theſe men that thus live, pretend ſtill that they are the perfect, (as of their followers in Irenæus we read, that they called themſelves the ſpiritual, and affirmed that all the fouleſt actions did no more pollute them than gold was polluted by being in the mire, or the ſun-beams by ſhining on a dunghil) they make God a lyar, (which is an addition to their lying firſt, ver. 6. and then deceiving themſelves, v. 8. and ſo frees theſe repetitions from tautology) that is, directly give God the lie, who hath every where declared ſuch actions as theſe men practiſed confidently, (abominable pollutions, &c.) to be moſt vile and moſt puniſhable ſins. And ſo this appears to be the full meaning of this verſe, and being ſo, leaves no place of diſputing from hence, whether of any regenerate man it can be ſaid at any time, that he hath not ſinned (in that notion which belongs to that phraſe in theſe Epiſtles of S. John, and is explained Note a. on ch. 3. to belong to wilful, adviſed, deliberate ſin) for ſure theſe Gnoſtick foul livers were far from regenerate men. That this is the full meaning of the place will farther appear by the words immediately ſubſequent, ch. 2. 1. Theſe things I write unto you that ye ſin not, which are very fitly adapted to this purpoſe: for there is no ſuch way to perſuade men not to fall off into thoſe foul ſins that now ſolicited them, as this of undeceiving them in this point, and aſſuring them that if they lived Gnoſtick lives, they ſhould never be deemed perfect men, which as long as they entertained themſelves with any hopes of, nothing could convince them of the neceſſity of forſaking them. Whereas any other way of underſtanding the place would not tend to that end of exhorting and warning them not to ſin. For if it were to be underſtood of all the beſt mens being guilty of ſin, how could that be a way of inforcing on them their duty of not ſinning? Many more arguments might be uſed by refuting all other imaginable interpretations of this place to confirm this, but this one of the Context may be ſufficient, which accordingly in the next Chapter purſues the ſame ſubject more expreſly; Hereby we know that we have known him, that we are true Gnoſticks indeed, (and not thoſe that falſly aſſume that name) truly perfect men, ſuch as Chriſtianity was deſigned to make us, if we keep his commandments, v. 3. practiſe thoſe vertues of purity and charity which Chriſt commandeth: and then v. 4. juſt as here in this Chapter, but more largely and explicitly than in this verſe, He that ſaith, I have known him, that is, calls himſelf a Gnoſtick, perfect man, and keepeth not his commandments, lives ſo contrary to the rules of piety and purity, and all Chriſtian vertue, as theſe pretended Gnoſticks do, ψεύστης ἐστὶ is a liar (juſt as c. 1. 6. we lie) and the truth is not in him, as c. 1. 8. the truth is not in us. But whoſo keepeth his word, v. 5. that is, lives according to the ſtrict commands of Chriſt, ἀληθῶς ἐν τούτῳ, in this man hath the love of God been truly perfected; he may on ſome grounds of truth pretend to perfection of charity toward God, to which theſe Gnoſticks falſly pretended, and ſo was the occaſion of all this diſcourſe of pretended perfection, when men live in vile ſins, as after of that perfect love which, if truly ſuch, caſteth out fear, ch. 4. 18.

CHAP. II.

Paraphraſe.

1. MY little children, theſe things write I unto you, that ye ſin not. And if any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous.]

1. My tender Chriſtians, I write this to you which I have laſt written, v. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. (ſee ch. 1, Note b.) to deter and forewarn you of this deceit that ſo many are now fallen into, that you may not be drawn away into the hereſie and impurities of the Gnoſticks, either by following them into unclean, beaſtial ſins, or by depending on and pretending to ſuch a perfection in your ſelves, which may ſecure you in any one act of deliberate ſin, but that if you have fallen, or ſhall fall into any ſuch act, that then preſently you confeſs it, and forſake it freely, and lay hold on Chriſt, who (for your encouragement, you may know) is on God's right hand, acting as an advocate for thoſe that have ſinn'd, and now reform and amend their lives, and, when the Church prays to him for any laps'd ſinner, he is juſt and faithful to perform his promiſe, to hear the Churches prayers, and to preſent them to his Father, and to manage all that belongs to ſuch, to their beſt advantage.

2. And he is the propitiation for our ſins; and not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world.]

2. And he, having entred by blood into the holy place, that is, having died for us, and gone to heaven, where he is now inveſted with power, which he exerciſeth in our behalf, is a powerful means of reconciling God to us, of obtaining free pardon for our ſins (on condition of our giving of our ſelves up to new life) and not for ours only, but for all the ſins of all the world of men, (on condition of faith in Chriſt, and new life.)

† that we have khownhim, ὅτι ἐγνώκαμεν. * I have known ἐγνωκα—

3. And hereby we do know † that we know him, if we keep his commandments.]

3. And this is a character by which it may be diſcerned whether we truly know Chriſt or no, (as the Gnoſticks call themſelves by that name, which ſignifies knowledge, 1 Tim. 6. 20.) that is, whether we have a right notion of Chriſt as he is our advocate, v. 1. and propitiation for our ſins, v. 2. and of his Goſpel, or no, viz. if we do what he commandeth us to do, live obedient to the directions of Chriſt, (ſee Note on c. 1. b.)

4. He that ſaith, * I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.]

4. He that undertaketh to be a Gnoſtick, or perfect Chriſtian, that is, one that hath more perfection of divine knowledge, and love of God, v. 5. than all others, if he expreſs not this in a pure and holy life, is the greateſt hypocrite in the world, (ſee c. 1. Note b.)

† in this man hath the love of God been truly perfected, ἀληθῶς ἐν τούτῳ ἡ ἀγάπη θεοῦ τετελείωται * or, the word which ye heard from the beginning, is the old commandment † a thing which is true in it ſelf, ὅ ἐστιν ἀληθὲς ἐν αὐτῷ * or, in us, becauſe the ſhadow paſſeth, for the King's MS. reads ἐν ἡμῖν, ὅτι ἡ σκιὰ παράγεται † already ἤδη

5. But whoſo keepeth his word, † in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.]

5. But the obſerving his commands is the only ſure argument, that he that doth ſo is a perfect lover of God, truly ſo called, (the appellation being falſely aſſumed by the Gnoſticks) and an argument of evidence to himſelf, that he is a branch, a member of Chriſt, as the Gnoſticks boaſt that they are, and that whatſoever they do, it cannot make them ceaſe to be ſo, (ſee Note on c. 1. b.)

6. He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk even as he walked.]

6. He that pretends to be a member of Chriſt (ſee Joh. 15. 4.) doth by that engage himſelf to live as Chriſt lived, or if he do not, to give over ſo pretending.

7. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had [a] from the beginning: * the old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.]

7. 'Tis not any new matter which I now diſcover or write unto you, but that which you were taught at the firſt preaching the faith unto you, and that which was taught you ſo early may deſerve to be ſtyled an old commandment.

8. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, † which thing is true in him and * in you: becauſe the darkneſs is paſt, and the true light † now ſhineth.]

8. 'Tis that indeed that Chriſt called a new commandment, and ſo it is in compariſon with the Moſaical Law, to which Chriſt hath added ſome degrees of perfection; but that is no prejudice to it, it is not the leſs true for being ſo, nor the leſs conſiderable to you, but ought in all reaſon (as proclaim'd by God from heaven, and Chriſt ſent on purpoſe to preach it) to be look'd on as a thing wherein we are at this time concerned moſt particularly, thoſe dark imperfect ſhadows of the Moſaical œconomy being now at an end, and the more perfect Chriſtian precepts which are to take place, and to turn out the Moſaical performances, being already, as the Sun, riſen, and ſhining in our Horizon, in full force obligatory to all Chriſtians.

9. He that ſaith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkneſs even until now.]

9. This conſideration obligeth you to all Chriſtian practices, actions of light, particularly that of charity and kindneſs to all your fellow-Chriſtians, contrary to thoſe emulations, and contentions, and ſeditions, and perſecutings of their fellow-Chriſtians, that are obſervable in the Gnoſticks among you:

* ſcandal σκάνδαλον

10. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no * occaſion of ſtumbling in him.]

10. He that is thus charitably diſpoſed and inclined, is the true Chriſtian, and hath little occaſion to inſnare him in any ſin, little temptation to any ill, moſt of the ſins that men fall into flowing from this original of uncharitableneſs, ſee Mat. 6. 22.

11. But he that hateth his brother is in darkneſs, and walketh in darkneſs, and knoweth not whither he goeth, becauſe that darkneſs hath blinded his eyes.]

11. For as the dark keeps any man from diſcerning which way to go, ſo doth uncharitableneſs obſtruct all Chriſtian practice.

12. I write unto you, little children, becauſe your ſins are forgiven you for his name's ſake.]

12. A precept I have, v. 15. which I deſire to enforce upon all ſorts of you: Firſt, on the tender Chriſtians among you, becauſe God hath been ſo kind to you, as to forgive your ſins for Chriſt's ſake, which will be an engagement to you, v. 15. to take off your love from the world, and place it on God.

13. I write unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, becauſe you have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, becauſe ye have known the Father.]

13. The ſame I have for you, the moſt antient, for you know Chriſt, (which is agreeable to thoſe of your age, to know the Antient of days) and that may be an engagement to you to love whom you know: And ſo 'tis likewiſe for young men, to whoſe age it is agreeable to entertain ambitions and deſires of conquering, and have been enabled by God to do ſo, to overcome the evil one, both the devil, and every other that can mean you any hurt, and (if you adhere faſt to Chriſt) all temptations of the world or devil. Which ſure is an engagement to you not to love the world which you have overcome. And for you, little ones, again, your knowing of the Father is an obligation to love him with a moſt filial love.

14. I have written unto you, fathers, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, becauſe ye are ſtrong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.]

14. And again I reiterate and reinforce this exhortation upon you, antient men, as I did before, to impreſs it the deeper, and ſo on you young men alſo; and the exhortation on which I lay ſo much weight to you all, is this,

15. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.]

15. Love not the world, nor any thing in it; for whoſoever doth ſo, that man hath not that love of God, which is preſcribed now under the Goſpel, of parting with all, when he calls for it, and following him.

16. For all that is in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and pride of life, is not of the Father; but is of the world.]

16. For all that is in eſtimation in the world, thoſe things that tend to our ſenſual pleaſures, profits, honours, and the like, and the deſires that are faſtned on thoſe objects (which are ſo obſervable all of them in the Gnoſticks, firſt, their filthy abominable luſts, ſecondly, their love of the world, which makes them deny Chriſt, rather than incur perſecution by profeſſing him, and thirdly, their looking on themſelves as men of deepeſt knowledge, and priding themſelves in thoſe perfections) are all from an earthy, not an heavenly principle.

17. And the world paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof: but he that doth the will of God abideth for ever.]

17. And all theſe, all wherein they ſo delight themſelves, what are they but poor momentany tranſitory things? whereas obedience to God's will helps us to perpetuity.

18. Little children, it is [b] the laſt * time: and as you have heard that Antichriſt † ſhall come, even now are there [c] many Antichriſts; whereby we know that this the laſt * time.]

18. This diſſeminating of unchriſtian doctrines among you, is no more than what Chriſt foretold ſhould fall out about this time. For now the great day of deſtruction upon the obdurate Jews is cloſe at hand, (ſee Note on Mat. 24. b. and Heb. 10. a.) And as Mat. 24. 5, 11, 12. 'tis foretold by Chriſt that immediately before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, there muſt be falſe Chriſts, that is, ſome that take upon them to be ſent from God, as Chriſt was, and ſo to be counter-Chriſts, falſe, counterfeits of the true, and again falſe prophets, bringing in new doctrines, and pretending to do miracles, to get authority to them; ſo now we ſee it fulfill'd, there having already appeared many who undertake to be the ſaviours and redeemers of the Jews, to reſcue them (which is their notion of a Meſſias) out of their conquerours hands, &c. and now falſe teachers, the Gnoſticks, under Simon the Magician, by whom therefore you ought not to be ſeduced, but to look on them as the men foretold by Chriſt, which ſhould, if it were poſſible, deceive the very elect, and by which we know infallibly that this is that time there propheſied of, which though it bring us ſome perſecutions at preſent, yet withal it ſignifies, that if we continue conſtant in faith, we ſhall ſhortly be delivered.

19. The Antichriſts, or falſe teachers, that are now abroad, may perſuade you, and be conceived by you to be of the ſame piece with us diſciples, and Apoſtles, and Orthodox Chriſtians, and not to differ from us in any conſiderable matters, becauſe they lived in the ſame aſſembly with us, immediately before they thus went out, and taught theſe falſe doctrines among you: But let them not impoſe upon you thus; the truth is, they were not of us, or of the ſame faith with us, though they went out from among us, and an argument of that you may have from their leaving us, or going out from us; For if they had been of the ſame faith with us, what needed they to have ſeparated? they would certainly have continued communion with us; and their not doing ſo, is a manifeſtation that, though they did live among us, yet they were none of them of the ſame faith with us, when they thus forſook us.

19. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us.]

20. And that teſtimony of the truth of the Goſpel of Chriſt, which was given to it by the holy Ghoſt, is imparted to you, and gives you ſuch an aſſurance of the truth againſt theſe impoſtors, that you cannot in any reaſon be thus cheated by them: ſee Note on Act. 10. c.

20. * But ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things.] * And ye

21. And conſequently my writing to you now is not out of jealouſie or ſuſpicion that you are ignorant of the truth; for then I would write more largely on this matter, and give you the evidences and proofs of all this: but I ſatisfie my ſelf with theſe brief admonitions, becauſe you are ſo firmly rooted in the truth, that you cannot but diſcern the difference of every ſuch falſe doctrine from the one revealed truth.

21. † I have not written unto you, becauſe ye know not the truth; but becauſe ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth.] † I have written unto you, not becauſe ὐκ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ὅτι

22. There is no ſuch liar, ſuch dangerous falſe teacher, as he that denies Jeſus to be the Meſſias, and thus do the ring-leaders of the Gnoſtick hereſie, (ſee Note a.) Whoſoever doth ſo is an Antichriſt, denying in effect both the Father and the Son; the Son directly, the Father by conſequence, becauſe he hath teſtified of Chriſt by miracles, and voice from heaven, which teſtimony of the Father is not true if Jeſus be not the Chriſt.

22. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt? * he is Antichriſt that denieth the Father and the Son.] * This is the Antichriſt denying ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν υἱὸν οὗτος ἔστιν ὁ ἀντίχριστος ὁ ἀρνούμενος

23. And ſo whoſoever denieth the Son to be the Meſſias, renounceth the Father alſo, who hath teſtified him to be ſo. And this do the followers of Simon, the Gnoſticks, who deny Chriſt to have been born, or lived or died truly, but only in appearance.

23. Whoſoever denieth the Son, the ſame d hath not the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father alſo.]

24. You therefore, whatſoever your temptations be, forſake not the doctrine which from the beginning of your Chriſtianity you have received: To which if you firmly adhere, if you continue in the conſtant profeſſion of the true faith of Chriſt at firſt revealed to you, you ſhall continue alſo in the favour and love of God the Father, and of Chriſt, which is reward ſufficient for that conſtancy.

24. Let that therefore abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning: if that which ye have heard from the beginning ſhall remain in you, ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son, and in the Father.]

25. And whatſoever hazzard we run by ſo doing, it matters not, though it be to loſs of life it ſelf, becauſe he hath promiſed eternal life to thoſe that ſtick faſt to him, though with the loſs of this.

25. And this is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, even eternal life.]

26. And this have I ſaid to arm you againſt the ſeducing Gnoſticks, &c. that are now among you, and are ſo ſolicitous to do ſo.

26. Theſe things have I written unto you concerning them that ſeduce you.]

27. And indeed I need give you no other armature againſt theſe, than what you have already: for the teſtimony of the holy Ghoſt, and ſo of God himſelf, given to the truth of that Goſpel which hath been preached among you, is ſufficient to fortifie you, and that is ſtill among you, and you have no farther need of teſtimonies of that truth againſt all oppoſers and deceivers; only hold faſt and perſevere in that which you have formerly been infallibly taught by that means, ſee ver. 20. and let not theſe ſeducers yet work upon you.

27. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you: and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the ſame anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie; and even as it hath taught you, * ye ſhall abide in him.] * or remain in him even now or ſtill, for the K.'s MS. reads, and points it ſo, μένετε ἐν αὐτῷ νῦν.

28. I beſeech you, my tender children, keep faſt to Chriſt, unmoved, that when that great fatal day of viſitation comes, that coming of Chriſt ſo long-expected (ſee Note b. and Mat. 24. b.) wherein the obdurate unbelievers ſhall be deſtroyed, and the believers delivered and preſerved, we may come with chearfulneſs and confidence (ſee Joh. 7. a.) and not be turned with ſhame from him, or as inconſtant (and ſo guilty) perſons, be aſhamed to meet him.

28. And now, little children, abide in him, that when he ſhall appear, we may have confidence, and not be † aſhamed before him at his coming.] † aſhamed of, or from him, αἰσχυνθῶμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ

29. Reſolving of this, that Chriſt is a moſt juſt judge, and conſequently that every upright perſon is a child of his, like unto him, and certainly ſhall be uſed by him as a ſon, have all protection and inheritance from him.

29. If ye know that he is righteous, * ye know that every one that doth righteouſneſs is born of him.] * or know that alſo, for the K.'s MS. reads γινώσκετε ὅτι καὶ

a. V. 7. From the beginning] There be in theſe two verſes, which ſeem perſpicuous, very many difficulties, which it will be fit to explicate. 1. What is meant by the beginning, and ſo by the old Commandment, which they had heard from thence. It hath been conceived by others that the old commandment was that given to the Iſraelites by by Moſes, and then the beginning muſt be the beginning of the Jewiſh Church under Moſes; and ſo there may be truth in it, that the commandment which this Apoſtle now gives them, (whether more generally, that they that profeſs God ſhould not fall into thoſe black heathen ſins, c. 1. 6, 8, 10. and c. 2. 1, 3, 4. or more particularly, that profeſſion of piety muſt carry charity to our brethren along it, which is the precept immediately ſubjoined, ver. 9, 10, 11.) was the very doctrine and commandment of Moſes, whom the Judaizers ſo zealouſly adhered to, and therefore they were not to look upon it as any new or ſtrange doctrine brought in by Chriſt. But it muſt be remembred, that thoſe whom this Apoſtle here writes to, being thoſe which had formerly by his preaching received the Chriſtian faith, and the end of this Epiſtle being to confirm their conſtancy againſt the ſeducers that were now amongſt them, it might be to them a ſufficient argument to receive what now he ſaid to them, that it was no more than he had taught them, and they had abſolutely believed and entertained at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel unto them. For the Gnoſticks pretending to be perfect, and ſo that whatſoever they did, they ſinned not, (ſee Note on c. 1. b.) that which the Apoſtle here from the beginning of the chapter deſires to impreſs upon them, is the unreaſonableneſs of this, the obeying the commands of God being the one thing wherein true perfection conſiſted, v. 5. and the living of Chriſtian lives after Chriſt's pattern, the only way to approve themſelves Chriſtians, v. 6. And to this it will be moſt pertinent to apply theſe words of the Apoſtle, v. 7. following immediately upon thoſe; and then from the beginning muſt ſignifie from the beginning of the Apoſtles preaching, and their receiving the faith of Chriſt, thus, That what he now ſaith unto them, they had once received for granted, when they firſt embraced the faith; and therefore why ſhould they now be led unto other perſuaſions, think they may live unchriſtian lives, and yet be perfect men, good Chriſtians? That this is the meaning of ἀπ' ἀρχῆς from the beginning may be concluded from 2 Joh. 5, and 6. where the ſame phraſe is twice uſed, I write no new commandment to thee, but that which we had from the beginning, (and that in the ſame matter, ſpecified here againſt uncharitableneſs, v. 9.) that we love one another; and v. 6. This is the commandment, that according as ye have heard from the beginning, ye ſhould walk in it. That this belongs to the true, pure, Chriſtian doctrine, taught them at the firſt planting of the the faith among them, (and not to the precepts given to the Jews by Moſes) and that in oppoſition to the new, heretical doctrines, lately brought into the Church of Chriſt by the Gnoſticks, may appear both by the antecedents and conſequents there. In the antecedents, v. 4. I rejoyced greatly, that I found of thy children walking in the truth, that is, according to the pure Chriſtian doctrine of charity, &c. as we have received commandment from the Father, referring to that voice of God's in mount Tabor, in the hearing of this and two other Apoſtles, that all were to hear Chriſt, that is, practiſe what he had commanded: And upon that it follows, And now I beſeech thee, not as writing a new commandment, but that which we had (that is, we Apoſtles had) from the beginning, when Chriſt firſt preached to us, that we love one another, that of charity being the precept that Chriſt moſt early and moſt earneſtly impreſs'd on his Diſciples, By this ſhall all men know that you are my diſciples, if you love one another. So likewiſe appears by the conſequents, the mention of the many deceivers entred into the world, v. 7. as the reaſon why he inculcates that commandment which they had had from the beginning, For many deceivers, &c. This concludes that the doctrine which he thus inculcates, was it which they had believed before theſe deceivers came, and ſo fitly belongs to that doctrine which from the beginning of their Chriſtianity they had entertained, and were now in danger to be ſeduced out of it, if they did not take care to make good their conſtancy. By this interpretation of the like phraſes there, it is all reaſon to interpret them ſo here alſo, and then that whole ſeventh verſe will be very plain; Theſe ſeducers bring you new doctrine: That which I bring you is not ſo, but the very doctrine that you received at the firſt preaching the Goſpel to you; and that which you did receive ſo, deſerves ſure to be look'd on, not with ſuſpicion, as novel, but with ſecurity, as an old commandment, which you can no more miſtake in adhering to, than you can think you did in your firſt receiving of the faith. And ſo that may be the moſt ſignificant rendring of the laſt words of the verſe, Ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ παλαιά ἐστιν ὁ λόγος ὃν ἠκούσατε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, either in the order wherein they lie, An old commandment it is, the word which you heard from the beginning; or elſe, making ὁ λόγος the Subject of the propoſition, the word which ye heard from the beginning (which ye received and believed when the faith was firſt preached to you) is the old (ſure no novel) commandment. This difficulty being thus explained, a ſecond follows, v. 8. what is meant by a new commandment. The phraſe ſure refers to the words of Chriſt, Joh. 13. 34. A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another, as I have loved you, that you accordingly love one another. Where the duty of charity to our brethren, though it had been commanded by Moſes's law, yet was now elevated to an higher pitch by Chriſt's example, and precept founded therein, even to loving enemies, and laying down or venturing our very lives for the ſpiritual advantages of other men. In which reſpect this degree of charity now required by Chriſt, is by him ſtyled a new commandment; and ſo 'tis here by this Apoſtle: And being ſaid to the Jewiſh Chriſtians, he foreſees ſome poſſible prejudice that may lie upon it, by being thus new, a ſuperaddition to Moſes's Law, (it being the Gnoſticks endeavour to comply with the Jewiſh Zelots, and to maintain Judaiſm againſt Chriſtianity it ſelf;) and therefore to vindicate it from this, he adds, ὅ ἐστιν ἀληθὲς ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, or ἡμῖν, as the King's MS. reads, which thing is true in it ſelf, and in you, or us, that is; This ſuperaddition to the Moſaical Law in this point of charity to other men, which makes it capable of the ſtyle of a new commandment, is in it ſelf true, that is, it is moſt certainly true that Chriſt made it, and in himſelf exemplified it to us; and therefore though it be in ſome reſpect new, yet all Chriſtians are obliged to receive it: and beſide that, it is true in you or in us, that is, hath a ſpecial conſiderable truth in it to us at this time; and the reaſon of that laſt is rendred in the enſuing words, ὅτι ἡ σκοτία (or as the King's MS. reads, σκιὰ) παράγεται, καὶ τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν ἤδη φαίνει, becauſe the darkneſs, or the ſhadow, paſſeth, and the true light already ſhineth. What is the meaning of theſe phraſes is yet a farther difficulty, but by analogy with other the like in theſe books may be explained. Chriſt is called the true light, Joh. 1. 9. Light in reſpect of his doctrine, which was the direction of every man's life, and true light in reſpect of the more imperfect ſhadows that had been before under the Law. Thus when it is ſaid, Grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt, and that the true worſhippers, ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth, truth denotes the ſubſtance in oppoſition to ſhadows, the ſubſtantial worſhip in oppoſition to the rudiments of the Law. And this ſenſe is much favoured here by the King's MS. which reads, not σκοτία darkneſs, but σκιὰ ſhadow, which is uſed of the Law, Col. 2. 17. Heb. 10. 1. and ſo the word παράγεται paſſeth doth incline; for that is oft applied to a ſhadow, (my time paſſeth like a ſhadow, &c.) but not ſo to darkneſs. And indeed as light is oppoſed to darkneſs, ſo true light, which is ſomewhat more, that in which is no mixture of darkneſs, is moſt fitly oppoſed to a ſhadow, in which there is ſome of that mixture. 'Tis true indeed ver. 9, and 11. we read σκοτία darkneſs, which may make it probable that it ſhould be σκοτία not σκιὰ darkneſs, not ſhadow, here. But that argument is of little force, becauſe there the oppoſition being betwixt that and light ſimply, σκοτία darkneſs was neceſſarily to be uſed; and by that is meant the darkneſs of ſin in both places, the hating the brother: but here it being not ſimply light, but with this addition, the true light, ſhadow is it to which that is moſt properly oppoſed. And it need not ſeem ſtrange that both theſe oppoſitions ſhould here be uſed ſo near one to the other, it being evident, that the doctrine of Chriſt, which is oppoſed to ſin, and ſo to darkneſs, which denotes that, is oppoſed alſo to the Law of Moſes, as a more perfect to that which was leſs perfect, an higher degree of charity now exemplified and required by Chriſt, to a lower and more imperfect degree of it before required by Moſes. As for the paſſing of the ſhadow, and ſhining of the true light, that evidently ſignifies the abolition of the Moſaical Law, and the Chriſtian Law taking place, prevailing over it. Which this Apoſtle, which knew that to be the laſt hour, and ſo the deſtruction of the Jewiſh Temple (and conſequently ſervice) ſo ſuddainly to approach, could not but know that it was now at hand. And indeed the Apoſtles having received revelations to that purpoſe (ſee Note on Rom. 7. a.) it is here truly ſaid ἤδη φαίνει, this true light already ſhineth, the Law was already aboliſhed, and only the Chriſtian doctrine in force already. And ſo this is a moſt commodious, efficacious reaſon, to prove and preſs the matter in hand, that it this were a new commandment, which here he ſpeaks of, and no old Judaical one, yet it was part of the doctrine of Chriſt, and that was now in full force over the world, the Judaical Law being already abrogated, and the deſtruction of their whole policy very near at hand, v. 18.

V. 18. The laſt time] That ἐσχάτη ὥρα here ſignifies that famous period, the deſtruction of the Jews, will not only appear by comparing that phraſe with many other of that kind in theſe Books, the τέλος end, and συντέλεια conſummation of the age, and ἐσχάται ἡμέραι the laſt days, but alſo by the whole Context in this place: For the ἠκούσατε (here following) ye have heard, being a form of citing, muſt neceſſarily refer us to ſome prediction that had before been delivered of the matter here ſpoken of, viz. the coming of Antichriſt. This prediction was certainly that of Chriſt's Mat. 24. where before this fatal day, in three ſtages of his diſcourſe, three ſeveral times he toucheth on this matter; firſt v. 5. There ſhall come many in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and ſhall deceive many; then v. 11. many Pſeudo-prophets (that is, that pretend a miſſion when they have it not) ſhall ariſe and deceive many; then v. 23. If any ſhall ſay, Lo here is Chriſt, or there, believe them not: for there ſhall riſe Pſeudo-Chriſts and Pſeudo-prophets, and ſhall ſhew many ſigns and wonders, ſo that they ſhall deceive, if poſſible, even the elect: behold I have told you before. Of the firſt ſort are thoſe counterfeit Chriſts who pretended ſoon after Chriſt's aſcenſion; of which it is therefore ſaid, ὅπω δὲ τὸ τέλος, the end is not yet, they were to be ſome years before this deſtruction. Of this ſort was Theudas, not he which is mentioned Act. 5. 36, 37. as antienter than Judas Galilæus; but another mentioned by Joſephus, under Claudius's reign, when Fadus was

Procurator

Procurator of Judæa, who, ſaith Euſebius l. 2. c. 1. a. out of Joſeph. Ant. l. 20. c. 5. ἀπάτησε πολλὰς deceived many. Of this ſort was the Ægyptian, Act. 21. 38. mentioned alſo by Euſebius, l. 2. c. ult. out of Joſephus. And ſo alſo Doſitheus, or Doſthes, in Origen cont. Celſ. l. 1. and in Hegeſippus apud Euſeb. l. 4. c. ult. and divers others who undertook to be deliverers of the people, which is in effect to be Chriſts, as a Chriſt is defined by S. Luke, c. 24. 21. μέλλων λυτροῦσθαι ὁ Ἰσραήλ, he that ſhould redeem Iſrael. So again in the laſt place, the falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets are the like to theſe, differing from them only in the time wherein they ſhould ſhew themſelves, viz. after the beſieging of Jeruſalem, v. 15. when upon the ſudden raiſing of it again by Ceſtius Gallus the Chriſtians fled out of Judæa, v. 16. for then was it an opportunity for falſe Chriſts to attempt to gather followers, and undertake deliverances, if any would be deceived by them. But the deceivers that eſpecially belong to this place are thoſe of the ſecond or middle ſtage, Mat. 24. 11. called there πολλοὶ ψευδοπροφῆται many Pſeudo-prophets, immediately before the ſtanding of the abomination of deſolation in the holy place, that is, (as S. Luke interprets it) before Jeruſalem was encompaſs'd with armies, that is, beſieged, as here the many Antichriſts among them is a proof that it was the laſt hour. Of that point of time five things are there foretold by Chriſt, which are ſo exactly fulfill'd in this time wherein S. John writes, that the very reciting them is almoſt the ſum of this Epiſtle. Firſt, that the Jews ſhould be very cruel in perſecuting the Chriſtians, Mat. 24. 9. Secondly, that many Chriſtians ſhould be ſcandalized by this means, that is, renounce the faith to comply with the perſecuters, v. 10. Thirdly, that they that did thus renounce the faith to comply with the perſecuters, (viz. the Gnoſtick-hereticks) ſhould perſecute thoſe that ſtuck faſt to Chriſt, and deliver them up to the perſecuters, v. 10. Fourthly, that Pſeudo-prophets ſhould riſe, and, upon this advantage of ridding men from perſecution, ſeduce many, v. 11. Laſtly, that upon this increaſe of perſecutions upon the orthodox Chriſtians both from the Jews and Gnoſticks, called the increaſing of iniquity, the orthodox themſelves ſhould begin to faint, their love to Chriſt grow cold, v. 12. After which it ſoon follows, v. 14. And then ſhall the end come. By the accordance of all which paſſages there and here, it is manifeſt who are theſe Antichriſts here ſet down as the immediate forerunners of the ſiege of Jeruſalem, viz. thoſe falſe prophets, 2 Pet. 2. 1. who there are ſaid to have denied the Lord that bought them, and here, c. 4. 3. to deny Chriſt to have come in the fleſh, and ſo were Antichriſts properly ſo called, profeſs'd enemies to Chriſt, and withal the moſt cruel enemies and perſecuters of the Chriſtians, that is, the Gnoſticks particularly, a ſect of unclean abominable Chriſtians, which being followers of Simon Magus, laboured to deceive many by rehearſing the miracles which he did, and by their doctrines of the lawfulneſs of renouncing Chriſt in time of perſecution gathered many to them, who were firſt willing to eſcape perſecuting, and then hated and themſelves perſecuted all others. And to this 'tis clear that this whole chapter belongs; firſt aſſerting the doctrine of Chriſt, which theſe had perverted and denied, v. 1. then the neceſſity of Chriſtian practice, v. 3, 4, 5, 6. againſt theſe moſt unchriſtian livers; then particularly the doctrine of Chriſtian charity, againſt their hating and perſecuting other Chriſtians, v. 9. 10. 11. then the contempt of the world and bearing of the croſs, and of all hardſhip for Chriſt's ſake, v. 15. and then in this v. 18. having told them, that (according to Chriſt's prediction) this was the ſeaſon to expect ſuch deceivers, he comes particularly to them, v. 19. that they went out from the Chriſtians, but were not of them, that is, were not true, but equivocal, and only nominal Chriſtians, and now were ſeparated from them, as a ſect that brake off and went out of the Church, and ſo were no longer to be counted Chriſtians, v. 21. eſpecially when they denied Jeſus to be the Chriſt, as the Gnoſticks did. And ſo he concludes that he had written to them of thoſe that deceive them, v. 26. That this place, and peculiarly v. 19. belongs to the Gnoſticks particularly, ſee Cyrill of Jeruſalem, Cat. 6. p. 134. where ſpeaking of Simon Magus, he ſaith, Περὶ τοῦ γέγραπται, ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλθον, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν, of whom it is written, They went out from us, but they were not of us; and as the Barocian MS. adds, εἰ γὰρ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν, μεμενήκασιν ἂν μεθ' ἡμῶν, If they had been of us, they would have remained with us: which is that whole 19. verſe applied to Simon and his followers, whom p. 137. he names, Cerinthus, (and in the Barocian Copy, καὶ Μένανδρος) Menander, Carpocrates, Ebion, and Marcion; and again Baſilides and Valentinus. Before him ſee Polycarp in his Epiſt. to the Philippians, p. 20. in theſe words, Πᾶς γὰρ ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, ἀντίχριστός ἐστι, καὶ ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἐκ τοῦ διαβόλου ἐστί· καὶ ὃς ἂν μεθοδεύῃ τὰ λόγια τοῦ Κυρίου πρὸς τὰς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας, καὶ λέγῃ μήτε ἀνάστασιν μήτε κρίσιν εἶναι, οὗτος πρωτότοκός ἐστι τοῦ Σατανᾶ, Every one that doth not confeſs that Jeſus Chriſt came in the fleſh, is Antichriſt; and whoſoever confeſſeth not the martyrdom, or teſtimony, of the croſs (that is, that doth not confeſs Chriſt when danger attends that confeſſion) is of the devil: and whoſoever converts the oracles of God to his own luſts, and ſaith that there is neither reſurrection nor judgment, he is the firſt-born of Satan, (which is in the antients generally the title of Simon Magus.) And accordingly in the Epiſtle of Ignatius the primitive Martyr, eſpecially that to the Smyrneans, he fortifies them againſt this doctrine of the Gnoſticks, that Chriſt did not ſuffer, nor was born, nor roſe again, ἀληθῶς ἐν σαρκὶ, truly in the fleſh, but only τῷ δοκεῖν in appearance.

Ib. Many Antichriſts] Who the πολλοὶ Ἀντίχριστοι were v. 18. hath been at large deduced, Note b. the whole ſect of Gnoſtick-hereticks. One miſtake only this matter may be farther liable to, by thinking the ὁ Ἀντίχριστος the Antichriſt here to be ſome peculiar perſon, diſtinct from the many Antichriſts there. If there were any convincing reaſons to conclude this, it would ſoon be decided who it was; thoſe firſt-fruits of Satan, Simon Magus, who may well be ſuppoſed alive at the writing of this Epiſtle, being affirmed by the antients to have contended with S. Peter and S. Paul at Rome, and that moſt probably at their coming thither, before their Martyrdom, that is, about the twelfth of Nero, very little before the Jewiſh war, which brought that ruin upon them. See Arnobius l. 2. adverſ. Gentes, Sulpicius Severus Hiſt. ſacr. l. 2. Cyril. Hieroſol. Catech. 6. Iſidore Peluſiot. Ep. 13. All relating that contention between thoſe Apoſtles and him, and that, ſaith Cyril, after the error of the Gnoſticks had ſpread it ſelf over the Church, and ſo made it neceſſary for the Apoſtles to oppoſe him publickly. Beſide him other particular perſons there were alſo capable of this title, Cerinthus, oppoſed by this Apoſtle St. John particularly, and Carpocrates and Saturnilus and others. And accordingly * Hippolytus the Martyr in his book, Περὶ σωτ. κόσ. καὶ Ἀντιχρ. interprets the place, many ſhall ſay, I am Chriſt, of Simon Magus and others, Ἀνέστησάν τινες λέγοντες, ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ Χριστὸς, καθὼς ὁ Σίμων ὁ Μάγος, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ, ὧν ἐκ ἔστι καιρὸς ἄρτι τὰ ὀνόματα μνημονεῦσαι, Some roſe and ſaid, I am Chriſt; as Simon Magus and the reſt, whoſe names it is not ſeaſonable to rehearſe. So Hegeſippus in that eminent paſſage, ſet down from him in * Euſebius, having named the ſeveral hereſies that were come into the Church in his time, the followers of Simon, Cleobius, Doſitheus, Gortheus, Menander, Marcion, Carpocrates, Valentinus, Baſilides and Saturnilus, concludes, ἀπὸ τούτων ψευδόχριστοι, ψευδοπροφῆται, ψευδαπόστολοι, from theſe were the falſe Chriſts, falſe Prophets, falſe Apoſtles, which divided the unity of the Church with peſtilent doctrines againſt God and his Chriſt. But there is no reaſon thus to affix the title, the ὁ Ἀντίχριστος the Antichriſt here being viſibly of the ſame importance with the ſame word v. 18. and that there, either all one with, or contained under the many Antichriſts that follow. For ſo the words muſt import, that the propheſie which had foretold that Antichriſt comes in the laſt hour, was fulfilled in the many Antichriſts that were then come; which could not be, if that Antichriſt foretold were another from thoſe many Antichriſts. And beſides it hath already appeared that the coming of that Antichriſt foretold, was the ariſing of falſe prophets, Mat. 24. 11. and then though the word be here in the Singular number, yet muſt it be all one with thoſe ψευδοπροφῆται falſe prophets, in the Plural. And it is ordinary for a word in the Singular to be a complexum, and ſo to ſignifie a whole ſort or ſect of people, as it is apparent

c. ὁ Ἀντίχριστος

ὁ ψεύστης apparent ὁ ψεύστης the liar here v. 22. denotes all thoſe falſe prophets, that is, heretical falſe teachers, that deny Jeſus to be the Meſſias, and not ſome ſingular perſon that did ſo. By all which it appears, that what is here ſaid both of the Antichriſt, and the many falſe Chriſts, belongs equally to the times before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and denotes the Gnoſticks to be them, and cannot duly be applied to any other. And if it be here objected that there is a difference between falſe prophets and Antichriſts, and ſo that the Antichriſt here will not be the falſe prophets, Mat. 24. I anſwer, firſt, that here appears not the leaſt difference in the importance of the words literally taken, (and accordingly, c. 4 1. they that are here called many Antichriſts, and there, v. 3. the Antichriſt, are πολλοὶ ψευδοπροφῆται) many falſe prophets, as appears alſo by comparing the characters of them there v. 2. with what is here ſaid of them:) for firſt, Chriſt and prophet are all one; the word Chriſt denoting that divine unction or commiſſion to that great Prophetick office which Chriſt exerciſed here on earth; and accordingly we know that Moſes foretels his coming in that ſtyle, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you: and ſo ſecondly, the words ἀντὶ and ψευδο in compoſition are oft all one, as in ἀντιποιεῖν and the like; as when we uſe the word counterpart, of one thing made like another, which yet is not it, and ſo counterfeit, one which pretends, and looks like another, which he is not. And ſo Ἀντίχριστος will be (moſt literally) rendred a Counter-Chriſt, and that is a Pſeudo-Chriſt, or falſe Chriſt. So * Palladius expreſly uſeth the word. For ſpeaking of the Devil, σχηματίζων ἑαυτὸν εἰς Σωτῆρα, transforming himſelf into the ſhape of our Saviour, and ſo adored by Valens, he ſaith, Ἀντίχριστον ποιῶν προσεκύνησεν, he fell down and worſhipp'd Antichriſt, or this counterfeit Chriſt, that is, the Devil in this ſhape of Chriſt. And ſuch it is certain was Simon Magus, who profeſs'd himſelf to be Chriſt Jeſus, who appeared to converſe among the Jews. See Cyrill of Jeruſalem in Catech. περὶ αἱρέσεων. If this be not ſufficient, then ſecondly, I anſwer, that the Gnoſticks or followers of Simon, as they were falſe teachers, and ſo might be called ψευδοπροφῆται in that reſpect, ſo they were bitter oppoſers of Chriſt and all the orthodox Chriſtians, denied Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, and perſecuted all that aſſerted it; and in that reſpect 'tis as viſible that they were ἀντίχριστοι, as ἀντὶ ſignifies oppoſition, or contrariety, Antichriſts beyond all that ever any Chriſtians were, or can be imagined to be. And then though Antichriſts are ſomewhat more than Pſeudo-prophets, becauſe all falſe prophets, or falſe teachers, do not thus deny or oppoſe Chriſt, and the fundamental articles of our redemption, yet ſtill the greater contains the leſs under it; and ſo that prediction that foretold there ſhould come falſe prophets before the beſieging of Jeruſalem, was abundantly fulfilled in theſe falſe teachers, which were over and above Antichriſts, profeſs'd oppoſers of Chriſt and Chriſtians.

* Lauſiac. Hiſtor. c. 31. p. 949. D.

V. 23. Hath not the Father] To have the Father is to be expounded by analogy with having grace, Heb. 12. 28. that is, retaining it, holding it faſt, or making uſe of it, as in the parable of the Talents, He that hath is he that makes uſe of and improves the talents by ſo doing; ἔχειν for κατέχειν. Thus here to have the Father is to retain and hold faſt his doctrine, not to forſake or depart from it, which every one muſt be ſaid to do (and ſo here οὐκ ἔχειν πατέρα not to have the Father) who denieth Chriſt to be the Meſſias, of whom God hath ſo poſitively teſtified that he is ſo. So again in the end of the verſe the phraſe is uſed, and ſo c. 5. 12. He that hath the Son, is he that adheres and continues in the faith of Chriſt. So 2 Joh. 9. He that abides not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God, that is, forſakes and apoſtatizeth from him; but he that continueth in the doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the Father and the Son, by adhering to Chriſt, and that doctrine which he hath revealed from his Father, adheres to God alſo.

CHAP. III.

Paraphraſe.

1. BEhold, what manner of love the Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, becauſe it knew him not.]

1. As for the perſecutions that befall the orthodox profeſſors at this time, and are ſuch diſcouragements to many, tempting them to fall off from their profeſſion, Mat. 24. 10. theſe are but effects neceſſarily conſequent to God's loving us: For is not God's love very particularly and remarkably expreſs'd and teſtified to us, that he acknowledges us to be his ſons, and gives us the privileges that belong to ſuch? Certainly it is: And yet this is the very reaſon that we are ſo perſecuted by the world. They look on us as a people contrary to them, having other relations than they have; for they depend upon the world, and not upon God, have nothing to do with him: and therefore no wonder that this befalls us.

2. Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it ‖ doth not appear what we ſhall be: but we know, that * when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is.]

2. My brethren, whatever our perſecutions at preſent are, this ſtate and condition of ours is the ſtate and condition of the ſons of God; and what we ſhall be hereafter, what inheritance ſhall be made over to thoſe ſons, is not yet revealed. But this we know, that when that bleſſed time ſhall come, we that are ſons of God, ſhall (as the notion of ſons ſignifies in the ſcripture) be like unto that Father of ours, like him in holineſs, and like him in bliſs, and that bliſs ſhall conſiſt in ſeeing of him as he is, a fountain of all that is deſirable to our natures.

3. And every man that hath this hope † in him, purifieth himſelf, even as he is pure.]

3. And whoſoever hopes or depends on God for any ſuch future ſtate, if he expect to receive it from him according to his manner of promiſing, not abſolutely, but conditionally, or indeed whoſoever ſets his heart on the viſion of God, a pure and bliſsful ſtate, not any ſenſual paradiſe, but a ſpiritual ſtate of bliſs, made up of ſinleſneſs and purity, will in all reaſon ſet a purifying here, be a practiſing and aiming after that excellent copy, that he may be capable of that perfect purity hereafter.

4. Whoſoever committeth ſin, * tranſgreſſeth alſo the Law: for ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the Law.]

4. Sin is a contrariety to the Law of God, an act of diſloyalty to our King; and he that deliberately committeth any act of ſin, doth proportionably commit a rebellion and diſloyalty againſt Chriſt.

5. And ye know that he was manifeſted to take away our ſins, and in him is no ſin.]

5. And Chriſt both by his example, being ſinleſs, never guilty of any act of ſin, and by all that he hath done and ſuffered for us, hath deſigned this ſpecial end to himſelf, to purifie our lives, and cleanſe us from all deliberate acts of ſin.

6. Whoſoever abideth in him, ſinneth not: whoſoever ſinneth, hath not ſeen him, neither known him.]

6. He that adhereth faſt to him, that as a member of his, continueth in him, falleth not indulgently or deliberately into any act of ſin; he that doth ſo, diſclaims all true knowledge of God, (is no Gnoſtick properly called) or converſation with him.

7. Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, even as he is righteous.]

7. My young tender Chriſtians, let not the Gnoſticks ſeduce you to your ruine: he that continues in all righteous actions, that actually performs the will of God, and not only in intention of mind, and that through his whole courſe of life, and if he fail therein, returns again ſpeedily by repentance, this perſon, and none but this, is the Chriſtian righteous man, he and none elſe is accepted by God as righteous under the Goſpel, in like manner and proportion as Chriſt doing righteouſneſs is ſaid to be righteous, upon that and not any other ground of denomination.

8. He that [a] committeth ſin, is of the devil; for the devil ſinneth from the beginning: for this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might † deſtroy the works of the devil.]

8. He that deliberately committeth any act of known ſin, is in that, or ſo far, an imitator of the devil; for at the beginning, ſoon after his creation, he acted rebellion againſt God, and hath done ſo ever ſince: And to take off all men from following of him, was the very deſign of Chriſt's coming into the world.

9. Whoſoever is [b] born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him: and he [c] cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God.]

9. Whoſoever is a true child of God, keeps himſelf ſtrictly from all deliberate ſin; and the reaſon is clear, becauſe that principle of ſonſhip, that from whence he is ſaid to be born anew, or of God, to wit, his ſincere reſolute converſion to God, if that continue to have any energy or life in him, is directly contrary to, and incompatible with the committing any ſin, and therefore he cannot thus ſin, becauſe he is a child of God, a regenerate perſon, that is, ſuch ſinning is unreconcilable with that ſtate.

10. This is the character of difference between pious and wicked, regenerate and unregenerate men; he that lives an impious and uncharitable life is no regenerate child of God's, whatſoever he flatter himſelf of his ſtate.

10. * In this the children of God are manifeſted, and the children of the devil: whoſoever doth not righteouſneſs [d] is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.] * By this ἐν τούτῳ

11. For this of charity is the grand fundamental doctrine, which was ſo often and ſo earneſtly commanded by Chriſt, when he was here on earth.

11. For this is the meſſage that ye heard from the beginning, that we ſhould love one another.]

12. And how contrary is this to that emulation, and maligning of thoſe that are better than they, which was the affection that put Cain on killing his brother, and doth the like in the Gnoſticks now abroad, who hate and perſecute all the orthodox Chriſtians to death, and can have no other quarrel to them, but that their own works are evil, and the others good?

12. Not as † Cain, who was of that wicked one, and ſlew his brother: And wherefore ſlew he him? becauſe his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.] † Cain was Καὶν ὃς

13. But this you pure Chriſtians have no reaſon to wonder at, if it prove to be your lot.

13. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.]

14. We know that we are regenerate Chriſtians (ſee Note on Luke 15. c.) by our charity to other men, which he that hath not is clearly an unregenerate, unchriſtian perſon.

14. We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren: he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death.]

15. The hating of others is by interpretation the killing of them, becauſe it is ſo in intention of heart, did not ſome outward reſtraint curb it; and he that is ſuch is acknowledged by all men to be quite contrary to the Evangelical temper, the regenerate ſtate, from the having ſpiritual life abiding in him, which the Gnoſticks, that are ſo malitious, do yet ſo much talk of.

15. Whoſoever hateth his brother is a murtherer; and ye know that no murtherer hath eternal life abiding in him.]

16. Chriſt's love to us was expreſſed in this, that he was willing to incur the utmoſt hazard, even to venture his life, to reduce us; and agreeably Chriſtian charity obligeth us to venture even our lives for other men, after the manner, and upon ſo noble a deſign, as Chriſt did, that is, to bring unto the Chriſtian faith (as the martyrs did) any one or more enemies of Chriſt, and ſo likewiſe in other caſes proportionable to this.

16. Hereby perceive we the love of God, * becauſe he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.] * that ὅτι

17. But how contrary to this is the practice of the world, when rich men that have to ſpare for others, have yet no compaſſion or charity to them? which he that doth, how can he be ſaid to be merciful as God is merciful, or how to love God, when he doth ſo contrary to his commands?

17. But whoſo hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?]

18. My dearly-beloved tender Chriſtians, let our charity to our brethren ſhew it ſelf in actions of ſincere kindneſs and bounty to them.

18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth.]

19. And by loving one another thus, we are able to diſcern or judge of our ſelves, that we are ſuch as we profeſs our ſelves to be, v. 18. and by ſo judging we ſhall have our hearts ſecure and confident that God will hear our prayers, v. 22. and Joh. 9. 31.

19. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, † and ſhall [e] aſſure our hearts before him.] † and we ſhall perſuade, πείσομεν

20, 21. And indeed that this diſcerning our ſelves to be ſuch as we pretend our ſelves to be, is neceſſary to the giving us this confidence toward God, appears by this, that on the one ſide our hearts condemning us is a ſure argument that God will do ſo too, (and then not hearken to our prayers) becauſe he knoweth all things of us that we can know of our ſelves; and on the other ſide, if we have nothing to charge on our ſelves, then we may come thus confidently to God, not fearing that he will lay any thing to our charge (ſee Note on Joh. 7. a.) that we are not guilty of, or that he will be wanting to them that walk ſincerely before him.

20. For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.
21. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we * confidence towards God.] * boldneſs παῤῥησίαν

22. And he will certainly hear our prayers, ſuppoſing them ſuch as to which his promiſe of hearing doth pertain, becauſe by obeying him we are qualified to have our prayers heard by him: ſee James 1. 6.

22. And whatſoever we ask, we receive of him, becauſe we keep his commandments, and do thoſe things that are pleaſing in his ſight.]

23. And one prime part of that obedience is to continue conſtant in the profeſſion of Chriſt, and perform all the duty owing from us to Chriſt and our brethren, according as he by ſpecial precept hath required of us.

23. And this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.]

24. And he that obeyeth him is really one of thoſe which the Gnoſticks pretend to be, that is, dwelleth or continueth in Chriſt, and conſequently receiveth all gracious influences from him, as the members from the head, as long as that is united to them: and that we are ſuch, that is, that Chriſt hath not yet forſaken, but ſtill continues united to us, appeareth by the gracious charitable temper and diſpoſition, ver. 10, 17. which we tranſcribe from him, ch. 4. 13. ſee Note on Luke 9. c.

24. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.]

a. Ἁμαρτάνειν ἁμαρτίαν ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν ἔχειν.

V. 8. Committeth ſin] Ἁμαρτάνειν, to ſin, and ἁμαρτίαν ποιεῖν, to do, or commit, ſin, which appear to be directly the ſame by comparing ver. 6, and 8. and ſo ἁμαρτίαν ἔχειν, chap. 1. 8. to have ſin, all one with having ſinned, v. 10. have a ſpecial energy in the writings of this Apoſtle, to denote a deliberate, preſumptuous commiſſion of ſin; not every ſin of ignorance, incogitance, frailty, but, after deliberation, an adviſed commiſſion of it. This is here affirmed to be ποιεῖν ἀνομίαν, the committing tranſgreſſion, where ἀνομία ſignifies oppoſition, or contrariety, to Chriſt's law. Juſtinian renders the word iniquitatem (Inſtitut. 4. de injur. Iniquitas & injuſtitia, quam Græci ἀνομίαν καὶ ἀδικίαν vocant) and iniquitas is this oppoſition or irregularity to the will of God, viz. that will of his revealed to us by Chriſt, to which we now profeſs obedience. It is here made matter of ſome queſtion, whether theſe phraſes, ἁμαρτάνειν, and ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν, to ſin, and to commit ſin, are to be interpreted only of an habit of ſuch deliberate ſin, or belong to one ſingle act of it. But the reſolution is eaſie, that though he that lives impenitently in any habit of known ſin, be moſt eminently ſaid to ſin, and commit ſin, yet he that is guilty of any one deliberate act is here primarily meant by theſe phraſes. This appears by the uſe of the words in ſome of the places, where it muſt neceſſarily denote an act, and not only an habit; as ch. 2. 1. Theſe things I write unto you, ἵνα μὴ ἁμάρτητε that ye may not ſin, where it would be unreaſonable to think that the holy Apoſtle deſigned his Epiſtle to keep them from habits only, and not alſo from each act of deliberate ſin. This is again evident in this place: for not only he that lives habitually in ſin, but he that commits any one deliberate act of it, ἀνομίαν ποιεῖ committeth a tranſgreſſion of the Law, oppoſeth and doth contrary to the Law of Chriſt, which ſeverely forbiddeth ſuch ſingle commiſſions, and not only the habits of them: and ſo ver. 5. when it is ſaid that Chriſt appeared that he might take away our ſins, and that there is no ſin in him, 'tis evident that he came to take away our acts as well as our habits, and that there was no act as well as no habit of ſin in him: and ſo in all that follows, v. 6, 8, 9, &c. one act of ſin is contrary to abiding in Chriſt, that is, to adhering to him,

him, to seeing and knowing, that is, to obeying him, one act is of, or from, the devil, one act as contrary to that seed, that purity, that principle of filiation, that is in him that is born of God, and not only an habit of it.

b. γεγεννημένος ἐκ Θεοῦ

V. 9. Born of God] What γεγεννημένος ἐκ Θεοῦ, being born of God, signifies, hath been noted Joh. 1. Note b. to have received some special influence from God, and by the help and power of that, to be raised to a pious life. Agreeably γεγεννημένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, he that hath been born of God, is literally he that hath had such a blessed change wrought in him by the operation of God's Spirit in his heart, as to be translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son, transformed in the spirit of his mind, that is, sincerely changed from all evil to all good, , from obedience to the flesh, &c. to an obedience to God. Only it is here to be noted, that the phrase is not so to be taken, as to denote only the act of this change, the first impression of this vertue on the patient, the single transient act of regeneration or reformation, and that, as in the Præter-tense, now past, but rather a continued course, a permanent state, so as a regenerate man and a child of God are all one, and signifie him that lives a pious and godly life, and continues to do so. For so that phrase of being υἱὸς or τέκνον a child or son of any kind of father, signifies a resemblance or similitude of inclinations and actions, as a child of the devil is one that commits (and so continues to do) Satanical wicked practices, and so sons of Belial are vicious persons; and so our Saviour interprets the phrase, If ye were the children of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham, but you are of your father the devil, that is, you do those things which are imitations of him, such things as he doth. And so generally in this Epistle, he that is born of God signifies a man truly pious, an obedient servant of God: and such is the subject of this Proposition here, when of such an one it is said, he cannot sin.

c. οὐ δύναται

Ib. Cannot sin] What is meant by οὐ δύναται cannot here, will best appear by what S. Chrysostom on Rom. 8. saith of the tree in the Gospel, where 'tis said, A corrupt tree cannot bear good fruit, nor a good tree corrupt fruit: he, saith he, that saith a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit, οὐ κωλύει ἀπὸ κακίας εἰς ἀρετὴν μεταβολὴν, forbids not a change from vice to vertue (denies not that to be possible) but affirms, that ὁ ἐν τῇ κακίᾳ διατριβὴ the continuance in wickedness cannot bring forth good fruit, for, saith he, he said not that an ill tree cannot become good, but that remaining evil it cannot bear good fruit. So when Rom. 8. 7. 'tis said that the carnal mind cannot be subject to God, Theophylact interprets it, ἕως ἂν μένῃ τοιοῦτον, it cannot whilst it remains such, οὐχ ὅτι ἀδυνάτου ἡ μεταβολὴ, not that the change is impossible; and so again v. 8. when it is said, they cannot please God, ἕως ἂν ὦσι τοιοῦτοι, they cannot whilst they are such. And so sure the affirming here of the child of God, the regenerate pious convert, that he cannot sin, is not the affirming that he cannot cease to be what he is, cannot fall off from the performance of his duty (against which the many warnings and exhortations that are given to pious men, ch. 2. 1. 1 Cor. 10. 12. Heb. 3. 12. 2 Pet. 3. 17. are evidences of the possibility of it) but that remaining thus, a pious follower, imitator, and so child of God, that in his actions resembles him, he cannot yield deliberately to any kind of sin. To which purpose saith Tertullian De pudicitia, Hæc non admittet omnino qui natus è Deo fuerit, non futurus Dei filius si admiserit, He that is born of God will not at all admit such sins as these, he shall not be the child of God if he do admit, or commit them. And Lactantius, Virtus sine ulla intermissione perpetua est, nec discedere ab ea potest qui semel eam cepit: Nam si habeat intervallum, si quando ea carere possumus, redeunt protinus peccata, quæ virtutem semper impugnant, Vertue is that which is perpetual without any intermission: He that hath once undertaken it, cannot depart from it. For if it have any interval (of sin) if we can want, or be without it, sins presently return, which always impugn vertue. And so S. Hierom on Mat. 7. 18. Bona arbor non fert malos fructus quamdiu in bonitatis studio perseverat, A good tree bears not ill fruit as long as it perseveres in the study or love of goodness. And so S. Augustin Serm. 29. de verb. Apost. Talia non facit bonæ fidei & spei Christianus, A Christian of a good faith and hope doth not such things as these, that is, Homicide, Adultery, &c. In the same sense as * Menander saith of the just man, a just disposition knows not how to be unjust. In this sense is οὐ δύναται, he cannot, used by Ignatius, οἱ σαρκικοὶ τὰ πνευματικὰ πρᾶξαι οὐ δύανται, carnal men cannot do spiritual things. It will not farther be pertinent to enquire, whether the sinning here (so unreconcilable with a regenerate state) be an act only of wilful sin, or an habit, because those Apostate Gnosticks, to whom this place is opposed, and all that went over to them, were guilty of more than single acts, even of the foulest habits of impurity and persecuting the Christians, v. 10.

* In Stobæo p. 100.

Δίκαιος ἀδικεῖν ἐπίσταται τρόπος,

d. ἐστὶ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ

V. 10. Is not of God] Εἶναι ἐκ Θεοῦ, to be of God, here (and chap. 4. 6. and 5. 19. and 3 Joh. 11.) is a phrase to signifie one that lives as God requires and approves of, a child of God in the beginning of the verse, born of God, v. 9. a sincere acceptable servant of his, that imitates the good, 3 Joh. 11. or in brief, a good Christian; and that not only upon this ground, because all Christian vertue is of God, but especially because it is agreeable to his will, an imitation of that which is most eminently and originally in him. And so on the contrary, Ungodly living is expressed by the phrase, to be of the devil, Joh. 8. 44. explained by that which follows, θέλετε ποιεῖν ἐπιθυμίας αὐτοῦ, doing, or delighting to do his desires, and his works, v. 41. and so to be of the world. To this purpose many the like phrases there be observable in Scripture, which are set to signifie this; as being in God, 1 Joh. 2. 5. and 5. 20. seeing God, 3 Joh. 11. that is, having considered and observed God in his actions, in order to imitating of them; for so to imitate is expressed, Joh. 8. 38. by doing what they have seen with their father: so again having known God or Christ, 1 Joh. 2. 3, 13. that is, so as to imitate or transcribe what we see in him; an evidence of which is, as it follows there, the keeping his commandments, and c. 4. 6. he that knows God, and he that is of God, are set as directly the same; and so v. 7, 8. and very often in this Writer. So seeing, and knowing him, together, 1 John 3. 6. and especially Joh. 5. 37. to hear his voice, and see his appearance, for that is there all one with having his word abiding in them. So to be the sons of God, Joh. 11. 52. the sons of God that are scattered abroad, that is, all that are or shall be pious faithful servants of his all the world over, that are qualified aright for the receiving of Christ when he preacheth to them, (such as are called the children of the kingdom, Mat. 13. 38.) and so oft in these Epistles, 1 Joh. 3. 2, 10. and to be born of God, 1 Joh. 3. 9. and 5. 4, 18. (contrary to which are generation of vipers, and children of darkness, or Belial, of the devil, of the wicked one, in an extreme degree; and born of blood, &c. Joh. 1. 13. in a more moderate degree) signifying not any act of spiritual birth, but a state of pious life, of resemblance unto God. So those that are given to Christ by God, the pious vertuous minded-men, being the only persons that are by the promises and grace of the Gospel really attracted and brought to receive Christ, Joh. 6. 37. those whom the Father hath drawn, v. 44. whom the promises have effectually wrought on, which work only on pious men; so those that are taught of God, or are docile, teachable by him. So they whose heart God hath opened, Act. 16. 14. that is, whom God hath affected with the love of vertue or Christianity. So to abide, or dwell, in God, 1 Joh. 3. 6. and in the love of Christ, Joh. 15. 9. and God in him, 1 Joh. 3. 24. and 4. 15. to walk in light, c. 1. 7. to abide in light, c. 2. 10. to walk as he walks, c. 2. 6. to walk worthy of the Gospel, Phil. 1. 27. of our vocation, Ephes. 4. 1. to pass our sojourning in fear, 1 Pet. 1. 17. to walk in good works, Eph. 2. 10. to have his word abiding in us, 1 Joh. 2. 24.

Paraphraſe. CHAP. IV.

1. My brethren, let me admoniſh you not to heed or follow every teacher that pretends to be inſpired (ſee Note on Luke 9. d.) but to make trial of all that ſhall ſo pretend, by the rules afforded you both by Moſes and Chriſt; and ſo much the rather, becauſe as it hath been foretold by Chriſt, Mat. 24. that at this point of time many falſe teachers ſhould come into the Church, ſo now we find by experience there are many.

1. BEloved, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits whether they be of God: becauſe many falſe prophets * are gone out into the world.]

* have come out ἐξεληλύθασιν

2. By this you may know the teacher to be truly divine, if he confeſs Chriſt thus born and crucified to be the Meſſias, (ſee v. 15.) For no falſe prophet will ever teach that, it being not uſeful to the intereſt of the falſe pretenders, or thoſe that conſider their own advantages, to follow a crucified Saviour to all kind of purity and ſelf-denial, and taking up the croſs after him, ſuffering perſecutions, as now all that follow Chriſt are ſure to do.

2. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; every ſpirit that confeſſeth † that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God.]

† Jeſus Chriſt which is come in the fleſh, Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα

3. And the Gnoſticks that in time of perſecution do renounce and forſake Chriſt, by that appear to be not from God: and theſe are the Antichriſtian ſeducers, of whom Chriſt foretold Mat. 24. (ſee Note on 1 Joh. 2. b.) that before the fatal day that expected the Jews, they were to come into the world, and now indeed they are come, Simon and his Gnoſticks, and are already every where viſible among us.

3. And every ſpirit that confeſſeth not * that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God: and this is † that ſpirit of Antichriſt, whereof you have heard that * it ſhould come, † and even now already is it in the world.]

* Jeſus Chriſt which is come ἐρχόμενον † and now he is already νῦν ἐστιν ἤδη

† that of Antichriſt τὸ τοῦ Ἀντιχρ.

4. You, my tender Chriſtians, have your doctrine from God, and have held out againſt the machinations and perſuaſions of thoſe falſe teachers; for the true Chriſt, which is by his Spirit and his doctrines in you, is greater and more powerful than the falſe teachers and falſe Chriſts which are now abroad in the world, v. 3.

4. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.]

5. They come not by any commiſſion from God, but from the incination of their own worldly hearts, to ſave themſelves from perſecutions; they are worldly-minded, their affections are placed on worldly pleaſures, and accordingly their doctrine is a doctrine of licentiouſneſs, of ſecular intereſts, and freedom from perſecutions, and worldly-minded men follow them.

5. They are of the world: therefore ſpeak they of the world, and the world heareth them.]

6. Our doctrine is the true pure doctrine of Chriſt, hath nothing of worldly greatneſs or ſecular intereſts in it, but only of piety and purity, ſelf-denial, contempt of the world; and every pious perſon hearkeneth to us: and this is a way of diſcerning true from falſe prophets; one is all for purity and confeſſion of Chriſt even in perſecutions, the other for worldly advantages and ſelf-preſervation.

6. We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error.]

7. Again, another evidence of our being from God is charity to our fellow-Chriſtians, for that is moſt ſtrictly commanded, and exemplified to us from God, and no practice renders us ſo like to God's example, and ſo concordant to his precepts, makes us ſuch Gnoſticks truly ſo called, as the ſincere exerciſes of this duty; and therefore that is my next admonition, to be ſure ye divide not, hate not, perſecute not your brethren.

7. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.]

8. He that is not poſſeſſed and throughly acquainted with that grace of love, by that appears to be utterly unacquainted with God, to have nothing of God in him, who is made up of love and kindneſs to mankind.

8. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.]

9. And hath manifeſted that in a moſt eminent manner to us, in having ſent his only Son into the world to reduce us ſinners to an holy and pious life.

9. In this was manifeſted the love of God * toward us, † becauſe that God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.]

* among us ἐν ἡμῖν † that ὅτι

10. And in this appears the height of God's love to us, not that we were earlieſt in our love to him, but that he began to us, and firſt ſent his own Son to propitiate, or appeaſe his wrath againſt us for our ſins, to deliver us from the puniſhment of them.

10. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins.]

11. This love of God to us muſt be anſwered with our imitating it toward our brethren, doing thoſe acts of charity toward them which God is not capable to receive from us.

11. Beloved, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another.]

12. For God is not in our reach to be ſeen or converſed with by us: whereas kindneſs or love is moſtwhat among ſuch. The trial therefore of our love, whether we have any of that divine grace in us or no, and ſo whether God abide in us, that is, whether thoſe eminent vertues (which are ſo remarkable in God, as that they are ſaid to be God himſelf, ſuch as charity, v. 8, 16.) are abiding in us, and whether the love which is in him toward men be copied out, and imitated, and ſo perfected by us (as the ſufferings of Chriſt are ſaid to be perfected in us, when we after his example ſuffer alſo) is this, by examining our ſelves if we are kind and loving to thoſe that are among us, our fellow men and Chriſtians, whom we do ſee, and who are capable of kindneſs, and the effects of love from us.

12. No man hath ſeen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.]

13. This is an evidence indeed by which we know that we adhere to God, are diſciples indeed, and as ſuch acknowledged by him, (ſee ch. 3. 24.) becauſe that temper and affection of love and charity, ſo illuſtrioully obſervable in Chriſt, is obſervable in ſome meaſure in us alſo.

13. Hereby know we that we * dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit.]

* remain μένομεν

14. And as an evidence of that, how great ſoever our hazard be from the enemies of the Goſpel, yet we continue conſtantly to preach Chriſt, and being eye-witneſſes of thoſe miracles, &c. which evidence him to be what he pretended, we accordingly preach and teſtifie that Chriſt is the very Meſſias ſent by God.

14. And we have ſeen and do teſtifie, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world]

15. He that ſhall venture to be a Martyr for Chriſt, to confeſs him v. 2. when dangers attend that confeſſion (ſee Note on Rev. 2. b.) as God is faithful to him, ſo ſhall he truly be ſaid to be faithful to God: ſee Joh. 14. c.

15. Whoſoever ſhall confeſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, God † dwelleth in him, and he in God.]

† abideth μένει

16. 'Tis acknowledged by all, that God hath given us a moſt eminent copy and pattern of love, by us to be tranſcribed toward him; when he calls us to it. God is made up of love, and in that degree that we partake of that grace, we are members of God, not broken off from him, but continuing in conjunction with him, and God abideth in us, is allowed a place in us, is not rejected or caſt out by us (ſee Joh. 14. c.) as he is by thoſe that do not through love hold faſt to him, do not adhere to, obey and imitate him in that great duty of charity.

16. And we have known and believed the love that God hath * to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.]

* among us ἐν ἡμῖν

17. In this the perfection of that love which is to be found in a Chriſtian, (ſee Note on ch. 1. b.) conſiſts, that in a time of danger, when we are brought before judges, and may probably

17. † Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have * boldneſs in the day of judgment: becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world.]

† In this the love with us is perfected, that we have ἐν τούτῳ τετελείωται ἡ ἀγάπη μεθ' ἡμῶν ἵνα

loſe our lives for confeſſing of Chriſt, then we retain courage and chearfulneſs, and confeſs him willingly, that we behave our ſelves in this world as Chriſt did when he was here, that is, lay down our lives in teſtification of the truth.

18. There is no fear in love; but perfect love caſteth out fear: becauſe fear hath torment: he that feareth * is not made perfect in love.]

18. Now ſuch love as this which was in Chriſt, hath no fear in it: Chriſt ventured and underwent the utmoſt, even death it ſelf, for us, did not through fear draw back from any thing which love to man or conſtancy to the truth of God could prompt him to: and ſo indeed perfect love baniſheth all fear of danger, even of death it ſelf, ſuffers it not to interpoſe or keep him from expreſſing acts of love, makes the lover extreamly valiant. For fear, in whomſoever it is, hath pain and anxiety in it, permits him not to do any thing that may bring danger with it, and ſo is quite contrary to perfection of love toward God, makes one man deny Chriſt, another draw back for fear of danger of confeſſing him; or elſe perhaps, fear brings puniſhment eternal of body and ſoul, Mat. 10. 28. and never permits any in whom it is to arrive to perfection, or reward of love: See Note on Rev. 2. b.

* hath not been perfected τετελειωται

19. † We love him, becauſe he firſt loved us.]

19. And certainly this love and degree thereof, and hazard run by it, though it be death it ſelf, is but a meer duty of gratitude in us, (ſee v. 11.) becauſe Chriſt hath begun to us, and when we were his enemies, ſinners that had never deſerved any thing but hatred and vengeance from him, laid down willingly his own life for us.

† or, Let us love him ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν αὐτὸν

20. If a man ſay, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeen, how can he love God whom he hath not ſeen?]

20. And it is not enough to profeſs this our love to Chriſt by appearing to be ready to die for him, or run hazards for the teſtifying the truth of our faith; for there may be a great deal of hypocriſie in this profeſſing of our love to God, 1 Cor. 13. 3. and ſo there is certainly, if he that ſo profeſſeth, doth not love, but malign and perſecute Chriſtians (it being impoſſible that any man ſhould truly love God, and not do what God bids him, that is, love his brother alſo:) for the beſt way to try our love, whether it be ſincere or no, is to obſerve how it expreſſes it ſelf on occaſion, when we meet with objects of charity; for if then we do not exerciſe and teſtifie our love, ſure we have not that vertue in us. Conſequently, if to men, with whom we daily converſe, and meet with ſuch opportunities, we do not expreſs any love, what reaſon is there to imagine we ſincerely love God, when of our love to him, and the ſincerity of it, we were never able to make this trial, becauſe we never ſaw him, nor had opportunities offered us of ſhewing any real acts of love to him? And beſide, ſomewhat may be judged by the difficulty of the thing: for he that doth not the eaſier, will hardly be ſuppoſed to do the more difficult. Now 'tis hard to love one that I never ſaw; ſight and converſation is one motive of love, and we ſee our brethren daily, but never ſaw God at any time: and therefore where the command, which is as punctual to the love of our brethren, as to the love of God, v. 21. is not able to prevail upon us for this, and where, beſide the command, which is equal on both ſides, there is one advantage to allure our love to our brethren, which there is not to invite or oblige us to the love of God, if that man manifeſtly fail in the one, which is ſo much more commended to him by that one circumſtance, how can it be imagined that he doth, or will perform the other?

21. And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother alſo.]

21. It being evident that by his command we are as really obliged to love our fellow-Chriſtians, as to love himſelf.

Annotations on Chap. IV.

a. Παῤῥησία

V. 17. Boldneſs in the day ——] Παῤῥησία is bold and publick ſpeaking, confeſſing of Chriſt before men, eſpecially when we have diſcouragements from doing ſo, ἄδεια fearleſneſs, ſaith Heſychius. So παῤῥησίᾳ περιπατεῖν, Joh. 11. 54. is to walk publickly and fearleſly, which Chriſt did not, becauſe of their conſultation to kill him, v. 53. So in many other places, particularly Heb. 10. 35. where παῤῥησία ὑμῶν is their conſtant confeſſion of Chriſt, to which all that chapter had exhorted them, (and that in deſpight of perſecutions) explained by ὑπομονή, v. 36. patience or conſtancy in ſuffering, and oppoſed to ὑποστολὴ cowardly withdrawing, v. 38, 39. (ſee Note on Joh. 7. a.) And ſo here being joined with ἐν ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως in the day of judgment, not the final judgment of God, but the day or time when we ſhall for the name of Chriſt be brought before any earthly tribunal, to be ſentenced even to death it ſelf. And ſo it is ſaid of Ignatius, in the ſtory of his Martyrdom, that he conceived that he could never come ad dilectionem Dei in plenum, to the full love of God, neque perfectum ordinem doctrinæ obtinere, nor to the perfection of Chriſtian doctrine, niſi per Martyrii factam confeſſionem Domino appropinquaret, unleſs he came near unto God by martyrdom. And ſo the meaning will be plain, that the ἀγάπη μεθ' ἡμῶν, the love or charity toward God which is to be in, or among us Chriſtians, ἐν τούτῳ τετελείωται, is perfected in this, ἵνα παῤῥησίαν ἔχωμεν that we have this conſtancy in confeſſing him in the time of the greateſt danger. And this yet farther appears, firſt, by the explication that follows, that as he is, ſo we are in this world, that is, that as Chriſt laid down his life in confeſſion of the truth, ſo we do the ſame when occaſion ſerves: and ſecondly, by the confirmation which follows, v. 18. There is no fear in love, fear being indeed the contrary to this boldneſs and conſtancy, wherein the perfection of our love conſiſts. Thus hath Tertullian interpreted the place in his Scorpiacum or Antidote againſt the Gnoſticks, Johannes negat timorem eſſe in dilectione, John denies fear to be in love. Quem timorem intelligi præſtat, niſi negationis authorem? What fear muſt we here underſtand, but that which is the author of denying? Quam dilectionem perfectam, niſi fugatricem timoris, & animatricem confeſſionis? What perfect love, but that which puts fear to flight, and animates men to confeſs Chriſt? And ſo that which follows, For fear hath puniſhment, he thus interprets, Quam pœnam timore puniat (ſure it ſhould be, quâ pœnâ timorem puniat) niſi quam negator relaturus eſt, cum corpore & animâ occidendus in Gehennam? What is the puniſhment which fear hath, or, with which he puniſhes fear, but that which he that denies Chriſt ſhall receive, when he is killed body and ſoul, and caſt into hell, Mat. 10. 28. or, which, ſaith he, is threatned to the cowardly, among (yea before) the other reprobates, in the lake of fire, Rev. 21. 8? See Tertull. cont. Gnoſt. cap. 12. and De fuga in Perſecut. cap. 9. In theſe laſt words, ὁ φόβος κόλασιν ἔχει, fear hath puniſhment, the poſthumous Notes of the learned H. Grotius have attempted an emendation, and read κώλυσιν for κόλασιν, rendring κώλυσιν out of the Gloſſaries, mutilation, imperfection, Κολοβὸν ἀτελῆ ποιοῦν. For this interpretation of that unuſual word Heſychius may be confuted, Κυλέϊ, ſaith he, (it ſhould be certainly Κολέϊ) κωλύϊ, ἐμποδίζοι, κολοβοῖ, and Κολεὸς, ἐλαττῶν, and Κολεῶσι, κολοβοῦσι, and Κολόσμαλα, κλάσματα. To this the Context would very well agree, the next words being, he that fears is not made perfect in love; where yet the ſame Annotations would turn ὁ δὲ φοβούμενος, he that fears, into ὁ δὲ κολοβούμενος, he that is mutilated. But to impoſe ſo remote an emendation without any authority of any Copy to avow it, is too adventurous an attempt: or, if it were not ſo, perhaps the ſubſtituting of κώλυσιν, impediment, hinderance, might be a more tolerable emendation, thus, for fear hath hinderance, it ſtops and encumbers love from doing ſuch perfect acts as it ought, or would otherwiſe be apt to do; he that feareth is by this encumbrance kept back, is not made perfect in love. But as theſe or the like emendations ought never to be admitted without great neceſſity, ſo there appears no pretence of that in this place. For, firſt, it may thus be rendred, Fear hath pain or torment, a kind of rack in it, which always keeps men in awe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 2. 15. that through fear of death ſome are all their life time ſubject to bondage or ſlavery, never dare do any thing of vertue, or duty, or heroick action, (and ſo 2 Tim. 1. 7. the ſpirit of fear or cowardiſe is ſet oppoſite to power and love) and conſequently never come to any perfection of love to God, or conſtancy of confeſſion, to ſuffer any thing for his ſake, as love doth, 1 Cor. 13. 7. and accordingly it follows, he that feareth is not made perfect in love. Or elſe ſecondly, it may be ſet after Tertullian's way, the conſtant love of God is a moſt rewardable perfection, whereas fear of worldly dangers, will be ſure to bring deſtruction of body and ſoul along with it, and therefore muſt be caſt out from having any thing to interpoſe when the perfecting, or, as τελείωσις ſignifies, the crowning or rewarding of love, is ſpoken of. Fearfulneſs is ſo unreconcilable with perfect love, that it is the moſt deteſtable forſaking of God: the coward is all one with the Apoſtate. Either of theſe ſenſes will accord very well with the Context, and with the literal importance of the words, but eſpecially the former of them.

CHAP. V.

Paraphraſe.

1. Whereas the Gnoſticks profeſs that they are the children of God, born of him, and alſo that they truly love God, as children a father; by theſe two marks you may judge of the truth of theſe pretenſions. For the firſt, every one that believeth and profeſſeth Chriſt to be the Meſſias (and accordingly cleaves faſt to that profeſſion, whatſoever the temptations be to the contrary,) and expreſſeth the power of that faith by his love, by depending on his promiſes, and obeying his commands, and patient ſuffering of any perſecution that befalls him, is a regenerate child of God, and none elſe (ſee Note on c. 3. b.) And for the ſecond, 'tis as certain, that unleſs a man love the brethren, he ſhall never be deemed to love God.

1. WHoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him.]

2. And not only our loving our brethren is an evidence of our loving God, without which we have no reaſon to think we do love him; but ſuch an union and conjunction there is between theſe two, that if we would know whether we love our brethren ſincerely or no, we cannot better judge than by knowing or examining whether we love God, for otherwiſe we may do many acts of love to our brethren, which may flow from other principles, good nature, gallantry, vain glory, &c. and not from charity, whereas this love of God, which I now ſpeak of, muſt be ſuch as expreſſes it ſelf by keeping God's commandments.

2. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments.]

3. Keeping his commandments I add, becauſe this is to love God indeed: and of theſe let me tell you, they are not ſo heavy and ſo unſupportable as is now pretended by many, who fall off from Chriſt, becauſe obedience to him is now like to coſt them ſo dear; but it is an eaſie, gainful, gratious yoke, Mat. 11. 30.

3. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not * grievous.] * heavy βαρεῖαι

4. For every loving obedient child of God (ſee Note on chap. 3. b.) whoſe affections are taken off from the world, and ſet upon God, chap. 2. 5, 7. doth with eaſe overcome the world, the terrors and other the temptations thereof, hath far ſtronger incitations to piety than the world can offer him to the contrary; and that which ſo much out-weighs thoſe carnal allectives or terrors, is that which the faith of Chriſt poſſeſſes us of, and he that is carried captive to the world, cannot be counted a cordial believer. Faith is not only the means of overcoming, but 'tis victory it ſelf.

4. For whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.]

5. And what faith is this ſo victorious? why, the cordial believing that Jeſus is the Meſſias, which containeth the believing all his promiſes, threats and precepts; without which it is not imaginable that any man ſhould reſiſt the temptations of the world, the delights and terrors of it, and with which it is eaſie to do it.

5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God?]

6. For of this Chriſt hath given us an emblem and example in himſelf, and ſo an obligation to it; his whole courſe here upon the earth was compounded of innocence and purity of life, and alſo of ſufferings, even of a ſhameful death: and theſe two things in him are emblematically expreſſed by the water and blood that came, not one or the other alone, but both together, out of his ſide at his crucifixion, (ſee John 19. e.) and one (if not both) of theſe, his ſinleſneſs, and indeed his being the Meſſias, ver. 5. is alſo teſtified by the holy Ghoſt in many particulars (ſee Note a.) and this teſtimony, being the teſtimony of the Spirit of God, is authentick, and fit to be believed, for it is his title to be the Spirit of truth.

6. This is he that [a] came by water and blood, † even Jeſus Chriſt; not by water only, but by water and blood: and it is the Spirit that beareth witneſs, becauſe the Spirit is truth.] † or, and the ſpirit Jeſus, for the King's MS. reads καὶ πνεῦμα. Ἰησοῦ, and ſo again in the next part of the verſe.

7. For as there being in heaven three able to teſtifie, and thoſe three agreeing in one divine nature, and ſo being all infallible in their teſtimonies, they have all teſtified that Chriſt, as he was here on earth, was the Meſſias; God the Father, by the voice from heaven, Mat. 3. 17. John 12. 28. God the Son, in ſaying to Saul, Why perſecuteſt thou me? and ſtriking him down in the place for doing ſo; God the holy Ghoſt, in that deſcending on him as a dove, and after on the diſciples:

7. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghoſt; and theſe three are one.]

8. So on the earth there are three witneſſes too; firſt, the holy Ghoſt, firſt, on Chriſt, and ſecondly, on and in the Apoſtles, who ſaw and witneſſed that the Father ſent Chriſt, ch. 4. 13, 14. ſecondly, the Water, and thirdly, the Blood, that came both out of his ſide, and by doing ſo, firſt, prove the reality of his humane nature againſt thoſe that ſay he was only in appearance, not in fleſh, or reality, and ſecondly, were an emblem of his innocence and ſufferings, and ſo theſe three agree in this teſtimony, that Jeſus is the Son of God, ver. 5. made up of all purity and patience, &c.

8. And there are three that bear witneſs in earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood; and theſe three agree in one.]

9. For the believing any thing, it is ordinarily thought ſufficient to have the teſtimony of two or three creditable men, and then ſure God's teſtimony from heaven is much more worthy of belief. And this teſtimony now produced for the truth of our belief in Chriſt, is evidently the teſtimony of God.

9. If we receive the witneſs of men, the witneſs of God is greater: for this is the witneſs of God, which he hath teſtified of his Son.]

10. He therefore that thus believeth in Chriſt, and in deſpight of the Gnoſticks Apoſtaſie acknowledgeth the Son of God to have come truly in the fleſh, hath no reaſon to fear, having God's teſtimony to ſecure him. And he that after all this, when God hath ſo teſtified in plain words, This is my beloved Son, &c. doth ſtill refuſe to believe it, he makes God a liar, in not believing his teſtimony of Chriſt.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the * witneſs in himſelf: he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.] * or witneſs of God, for the King's MS. reads μαρτυρίαν τῦ Θεῦ

11. And the ſum of this teſtimony of God's concerning Chriſt is, that the way that Chriſt hath put us in is the true way to eternal bliſs, and that this is to be had by following the example and precepts of Chriſt, whom therefore in that voice from heaven he commanded all men to hear.

11. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son.]

12. He that thus inſiſts on Chriſt's doctrine and pattern ſet before him, is as ſure of attaining this bliſs, as if he were already poſſeſs'd of it; and he that doth not, hath nothing to do with it.

12. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.]

13. This I have ſaid to all you that are true believers, to give you aſſurance that ſalvation, and all that on God's part belongs to it, is made over to you in Chriſt, that you may be incouraged to continue in the faith, and wholly depend on Chriſt for all that belongs to you with all the confidence imaginable, and ſo never fall off in time of worldly preſſures.

13. Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.]

14. And of this confidence this is one ſpecial branch, that we come boldly and freely (ſee Joh. 7. a.) to make our requeſt to him, depending on that promiſe which God in Chriſt hath made to us, viz. that he will hear all the faithful requeſts of his ſervants: but that promiſe with theſe limitations; firſt, that what they ask be according to God's will, not only not abhorrent from it, but truly agreeable to it; and ſecondly, according to his wiſdom, that which at that time to that perſon he judgeth fit to be granted him, and neither contrary to any thing he hath decreed, or ſuch that by any accident God ſees either hurtful, or not uſeful, or leſs profitable to him; thirdly, that he ask in faith, reſolved to ſtick faſt to God, whatſoever comes, to uſe no means of obtaining his deſires but ſuch as are perfectly acceptable to him: ſee James 1. 6.

14. And this is the confidence that we have † in him, that if we [b] ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.] † toward him πρὸς αὐτὸν

15. And if this of God's hearing our prayers be univerſally true of all whatſoever that are thus qualified, then in proportion it muſt be true of every particular petition, which we have or ſhall ask of him; 'tis certain that he heareth, and granteth it inſtantly, and will actually, in his time, and in that manner and way that he ſees beſt for us (though not inſtantly, or in the kind which we ask) moſt infallibly beſtow it on us.

15. And if we know that he hears us, whatſoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we deſired of him.] * of that I ſay not that he ſhould pray ὑπὲρ ἐκείνης λέγω ὅτι ἐρωτήσῃ

16. One inſtance of this I ſhall mention to you, If any man ſee his fellow-Chriſtian

16. If any man ſee his brother ſin a ſin which is not unto death, he ſhall ask, and he ſhall give him life for them that ſin not unto death. There is a [c] ſin unto death: * I do not ſay that he ſhall pray it.]

fall into any deliberate ſin, yet ſo as not to refuſe admonition or contemn advice to reform, that is, if he that thus ſins do not remain incorrigible under the cenſures of the Church, then in that caſe it is the duty of the Church, and of each particular Chriſtian, to pray to God for him, that he will pardon his ſin, and raiſe him ſpeedily by his grace to that ſtate from whence he is fallen, and for any ſuch offence, not obſtinately continued in, God will thus hear the prayers of the Church for him. But this not ſo, that God will upon any interceſſion pardon him before his returning and repenting, but that the Church may admit ſuch an one to repentance, and upon his approving his ſincerity of repentance, receive him by impoſition of hands, and bleſſing, and abſolution. But in caſe he go on contumaciouſly and incorrigibly, there is then no mercy under the Goſpel for ſuch, nor promiſe that the prayers of the Church ſhall be available for ſuch.

17. All unrighteouſneſs is ſin: and there is a ſin not unto death.] 17. 'Tis true indeed, all deliberate ſin is ſuch as is not reconcilable with the fear and love of God, and conſequently mortiferous without repentance: yet ſome difference there may be in this, and ſome that have ſinned may not yet be ſo contumacious, ſo deſperately incorrigible as others, and of thoſe I now ſpeak.

18. We know that whoſoever is born of God, ſinneth not; but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himſelf, and that wicked one toucheth him not.] 18. As for theſe deliberate ſins, which are not look'd on as ſins unto death, mortiferous in ſo high a degree, we know that a pious perſon (ſee Note on c. 3. d.) will not be guilty of any of them, he uſeth all care and diligence to keep himſelf pure, that the devil or tempter get no hold on him.

19. And we know that we are of God, and † the whole world lyeth in wickedneſs.] 19. And we know that we Chriſtians have by our profeſſion undertaken pure and pious lives, are elevated to God, whereas the wicked riotous multitude of Gnoſticks, &c. are ſet upon nothing elſe but villany, Exod. 32. 22.

20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding, that we may know * him that is true: and we are in him that is true, † even in his Son Jeſus Chriſt. This is the true God, and eternal life.] 20. But againſt the doctrines and infuſions of theſe we are armed ſufficiently by Chriſt, who, we are ſure, is come in the fleſh, and came on purpoſe to inſtruct us in the knowledge and obedience to the commands of the true God; ſo that hereby we have all ſecurity that we cannot miſtake, it being God, who cannot lie, whom we adhere to, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, of whom he hath given his teſtimony. And thus we may confidently reſolve that the Chriſtian Religion is the true.

Farewel, my tender Chriſtians, and be ſure you keep your ſelves from offering ſacrifices to the falſe idol Gods (which the Gnoſticks would do in caſe of perſecution) and from thoſe mixtures of heatheniſm and uncleanneſſes, practiſed in their heathen worſhips by them, and brought in among Chriſtians by that licentious ſect, and even from images themſelves, which the Gnoſticks (who pretended to have forſaken the idolatries of the heathens, and ſo to have become Chriſtians) did again fall into, worſhipping the images and pictures of Simon Magus and Helena, and offering ſacrifices unto them. Amen.

Annotations on Chap. V.

a. ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδ☉ χ῍ αἵμα☉

V. 6. Came by water and blood] What ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδα☉ χ῍ αἵμα☉, he that came by water and blood, here ſignifies, will appear by conſidering the Context, and the relation of theſe to the former words. There the belief that Jeſus is the Son of God, is the means of victory over the temptations of the world, the baits then offered by the Gnoſticks, carnal pleaſures on one ſide, and immunity from perſecutions on the other. And to that this belief is a very proper inſtrument. For conſidering wherein Chriſt's ſonſhip was exerciſed here on earth, his innocence and his ſufferings, and that if we will behave our ſelves as ſons of God, we muſt imitate him, and that our faith in him conſiſts in thus tranſcribing theſe his filial qualifications, the concluſion hence follows, that he that is ſuch a child of God, v. 4. that is, that believes that Jeſus is the Son of God, v. 5. doth, or will overcome the world. This then being the force of the Apoſtle's arguing, it muſt follow that theſe words, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδα☉ χ῍ αἵμα☉, this is he that came by water and blood, muſt be the deſcription of Chriſt, as that ſonſhip of his is expreſs'd for our imitation in this matter, that is, as he approv'd his innocence, faultleſneſs to God on one ſide, and his patience, and (in ſpight of temptations, even of death it ſelf) perſeverance on the other ſide. And this is here figuratively expreſs'd, and the figure fetched from an eminent paſſage in the ſtory of Chriſt, particularly conſidered and related by S. John, and that with a ſpecial weight laid on it, both for the truth and the conſiderableneſs of it, viz. the water and blood that at his crucifixion came out of his ſide at the piercing of it, the water being a moſt proper emblem of his innocence, and the blood of his patience and conſtancy; and then the ἐλθὼν διὰ ἐλθὼν διὰ, his having come by theſe two, is no more than the having had theſe two emblems, and the things ſignified by them, moſt eminently obſervable in the diſcharge of his office here on earth. For we know that being ſent, or coming, are the words that refer to diſcharge of office. Chriſt is ſaid to be ſent by God, and, which is all one, to come, and is proverbially ſtyled ὁ ἐρχόμν☉, he that cometh, and he that cometh into the world, that is, the great Prophet ſent by God for the diſcharge of this office, which as Son of God, Mat. 3. 17. he was ordained to, and for which he came into the world, and which he did with perfect ſingleneſs, and reſiſting unto blood, ſuffering death in the cauſe: and thoſe two were expreſs'd by that joint emblem at his death, the water and blood, which John ſaw flow from him. In this matter alſo it is, that the Spirit is alſo joined as a teſtifier (that is the meaning of ὅτι μάρτυρόν ἐστι, is teſtifying) viz. of the innocence of Chriſt (which being granted, the conſtancy and ſufferings were ſufficiently known and proved by that αἱματυδατόῤῥυσις, flowing out of water and blood, which was an evidence of the wounding and piercing him to the heart.) For firſt, the Spirit's deſcending on him at his baptiſm, and lighting on him as a dove, was one teſtimony of his perfect innocence and acceptableneſs in the ſight of his Father. And ſecondly, by that Spirit's deſcent being inſtated on his Prophetick office, he is alſo furniſhed with the gift of miracles, &c. which were ſure teſtimonies that what he preached was God's meſſage, that he was no ſinner, no ſeducer, no falſe prophet, ſeeing, as the Jews confeſs'd, he did ſuch miracles. Thirdly, the coming down of that Spirit upon the Apoſtles, and that according to the promiſe of Chriſt, was a teſtimony of the truth of what elſe he ſaid, and by this deſcent the Spirit became a Paraclete or Advocate of Chriſt, and ſo teſtified and convinced the world, as of their ſin in crucifying him, ſo of his righteouſneſs, in that, after his crucifixion, he was raiſed and taken up to the Father. All this being thus ſaid in this verſe, as it is the proving of what went before, by theſe three witneſſes, ſo doth it introduce what follows, v. 7, 8. which is but the ſaying the ſame again, and joining a parallel with it; for ſo, I ſuppoſe, the following words are to be underſtood, For there are three that bear witneſs in heaven, &c. not that that is a reaſon of what went immediately before (for it would be hard to ſhew how thus the ſeventh verſe could be a reaſon of v. 6. how the trinity of witneſſes in heaven ſhould be a proof that the water, and blood, and ſpirit, do witneſs, v. 6.) but that it is a parallel to illuſtrate it by, and might in ſenſe be beſt expreſs'd thus, As there be three that bear witneſs in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the holy Ghoſt; and theſe three are one: So alſo there are three that teſtifie on the earth, the ſpirit, and water, and blood; and theſe three, though they are not one by any kind of unity of nature, as the former three are, yet they agree in one, that is, in one teſtimony, evidently confirming the ſame thing which they were brought to teſtifie, v. 6. Of ſuch like idioms of ſpeech we have formerly noted many, in Note on Mat. 9. d. By this means, as this whole place is competently explained, and freed from all difficulty, ſo is it vindicated from a firſt miſ-interpretation, which ſome late writers have faſtned on it, interpreting the ἓν εἰσι v. 7. are one, by εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσι, they agree in one. But of this, firſt, there can be no evidence, nor indeed any reaſon aſſigned that the phraſe ſhould be ſo ſuddenly altered, v. 8. if the ſame thing were meant which was (ſo immediately before v. 7.) ſo differently expreſſed. If ἓν εἰσι are one had ſignified no more but agree in one teſtimony, v. 7. is it imaginable that of thoſe other three, which had ſo lately been affirmed to teſtifie the ſame, v. 6.

this would have been affirmed in other (ſo much plainer) words, εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσι, are to one purpoſe, or agree in one? If there had been any reaſon thus to vary the phraſe, it would probably have been by applying the obſcurer phraſe to thoſe three, of whom it had been before ſufficiently affirmed, and the more perſpicuous and explicit to the three in heaven, of whom it had not been formerly affirmed, and not ſo directly contrary as here we find it is. Secondly the only reaſon pretended why ἓν εἰσι, are one, ſhould not infer really, as literally it doth, the unity of the Trinity, being this, becauſe εἰς ἓν εἰσι, agree in one, is attributed to the three on earth. That argument is of no kind of force; for the parallel here held between thoſe in heaven and thoſe on earth being only in reſpect of the teſtimonies, and of the number of the teſtifiers, there is no neceſſity that the Apoſtle or we ſhould extend it to all other circumſtances; or if there were, it would be as reaſonable to interpret the latter by the former, the εἰς ἓν εἰσι, they are to one purpoſe, by the ἓν εἰσι, they are one, (which were abſurd, and is not imagined) as the former by the latter. Indeed no reaſon for either of them: But on the other ſide, having to the mention of the three witneſſes in heaven, annex'd, out of the Chriſtian doctrine, the ἕτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἓν εἰσι, theſe three are one, it was reaſonable, when he came to the other three, of whom that could not be affirmed, to affirm of them as much as the matter would bear, that is, that they are εἰς ἕν, teſtifiers to the ſame purpoſe, though not ἓν of one, and the ſame nature. Laſtly, if it were granted that ἓν εἰσι, are one, did note (as εἰς ἓν doth) the according of their teſtimonies, yet that no way excludes the unity of the teſtifiers, becauſe both thoſe ſenſes may belong to the place and be true, the unity of the teſtifiers neceſſarily inferring the according of their teſtimonies, though the according of the teſtimonies infer not the unity of the teſtifiers. And then both theſe being ſo conſequent one to the other, and ſo pertinent to the Apoſtles purpoſe, (viz. the conſent of all witneſſes to the truth he had to prove) and the words being in themſelves ſo clear for the aſſerting of the unity, there can be no pretence or reaſon to doubt but this is the importance of them. One thing only is here needful to be added, that in the King's MS. (and many other Copies) a great part of theſe two verſes is left out, and in ſtead of them no more read but this, ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες, τὸ πνεῦμα, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ τὸ αἷμα, For there are three that bear witneſs, the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood. But of this it muſt firſt be obſerved, that the ordinary reading hath the authority of many antient, and all, but one, printed Copies: ſecondly, that the omiſſion may have been caſual, by the error of ſome ſcribe, who having tranſcribed in the Copy before him as far as, ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες, his eye might by error paſs to ver. 8. where the ſame words are again repeated, and ſo leap over what is in the midſt, and immediately ſubjoin what there immediately follows after, μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῇ γῇ, τὸ πνεῦμα, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ τὸ αἷμα, καὶ οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσιν. Many examples of viſible omiſſions on this occaſion are obſervable in this and moſt other MS. as might largely be evidenced; and it is that to which the haſt of tranſcribers, and the neceſſity of taking off the eye from the Copy, renders them very liable. Which error being once committed in one Copy, he that ſhould come after, and tranſcribe that, might, upon judgment and reaſon, omit ſomewhat more, viz. ἐν τῇ γῇ, and καὶ οἱ τρεῖς εἰς ἓν εἰσι, becauſe thoſe two parts of the verſe being ſet diſtinctly by way of oppoſition to two former, ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, and ἕτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἓν εἰσι, the former verſe, in which thoſe two were, being once loſt, theſe latter were by congruity to go after them, and to be left out alſo. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that (as to theſe two phraſes) there is yet a greater variety in the Copies, the Syriack and Arabick having the καὶ οἱ τρεῖς ἓν εἰσι, or εἰς ἓν εἰσι, and theſe three are one, or to one purpoſe, and many Copies having ἐν τῇ γῇ, on the earth, which yet have not the former verſe; which ſhews that the former caſual error was firſt committed before this other, which was taken up on judgment, and that all that followed the one, where there was no place of choice, did not, where there was choice, chuſe to follow the other. Thirdly, that it is not imaginable how, if this of the King's MS. and thoſe others were the right reading, this which is now in the ordinary Copies ſhould get in, unleſs it were by groſs fraud and forgery: for to the infirmities of a ſcribe (to which omiſſions may) theſe additions cannot be imputable. Fourthly, that if the addition be thought imputable to a fraud on one ſide, the leaving it out may much more reaſonably be imputed to a fraud on the other ſide. For firſt, ſuppoſing it thus far equal, that as the omiſſion was uſeful to the Arrians and Anti-Trinitarians, ſo the addition was of advantage to the Catholicks or Orthodox; yet it is preſently viſible, that the intereſt of thoſe that were condemned in the Church as hereticks was far greater, and the neceſſity more preſſing on their part, (that I mention not the greater likelihood of hereticks adventuring to make uſe of ſuch a forgery) to leave out the words and commit this fraud, than that of the Catholicks was to put them in. For if the words be once acknowledged to be the words of Scripture, it gives a concluſion to all the hereticks pretenſions, and it neceſſarily follows, firſt, that they that deny the Trinity, moſt diametrically oppoſe the plain words of Scripture, the ἕτοι οἱ τρεῖς, theſe three, here; and ſecondly, that they that deny the Unity, contradict diſtinctly S. John's affirmation of ἓν εἰσι, theſe three are one; thirdly, that they that deny the holy Ghoſt to be God, and yet do not affirm him to be a creature, and conſequently conclude him to be nothing but the virtue and efficacy of God, do oppoſe the plain words here, which diſtinguiſh the holy Ghoſt from the Word, and from the Father, as much, and in the ſame manner, as the Word, or ſecond hypoſtaſis, from the Father on one ſide, or from the holy Ghoſt on the other. And ſo long as theſe words ſtand in force, it is not poſſible for the hereticks doctrines to be maintained, (and therefore it is that Socinus and his followers find it neceſſary to affirm, that theſe words are certainly ſuppoſititious.) But for the Catholicks, that maintain the doctrine aſſerted by the firſt great general Councils, againſt the hereticks of the Church, they had no ſuch need of inſerting and forging theſe words: their cauſe might be otherwiſe maintained, if theſe words were expunged, and put out of the Canon, firſt, by the form of Baptiſm, Mat. 28. 19. inſtituted by Chriſt; which, firſt, clears the diſtinction of the Father, the Son, and holy Ghoſt, as fully as this; and ſecondly, by making them the object of our faith, ſuppoſeth each to be God as well as any, the holy Ghoſt, and the Son, as well as the Father; which being ſuppoſed, the Unity may from thence be collected alſo, by force of Eph. 4. 5. where parallel to the one Baptiſm is added one God and Father of all, noting the one form of Chriſtian Baptiſm, In the name of the Father, and the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, to be the entring of us into the faith and name of the one God. Secondly, by the expreſs words of Chriſt, I and my Father are one, John 10. 30. which affirming the unity of the Father, and the Son, leaves no place to doubt of the like unity of the holy Ghoſt alſo. Thirdly, by the Apoſtles ſwearing by Chriſt, and (which is all one) calling to witneſs the holy Ghoſt, Rom. 9. 1. which is an act of Divine worſhip appropriated to God, by whom only we are to ſwear. Fourthly, by the Apoſtle's praying to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt for his grace, to the holy Ghoſt for his communication, or liberal effuſion of his gifts, as well as to God the Father for his love; which is become the ſolemn form of Apoſtolical benediction at the end of the Epiſtles. Fifthly, (as far as concerns the holy Ghoſt,) by Act. 5. where deceiving or robbing the holy Ghoſt, v. 3. is lying to God, v. 4. and 1 Cor. 12. 11. where the Spirit, as a perſon, is ſaid to work, and to divide to every one according as he will. Laſtly, (as far as concerns Chriſt, who hath been moſt eminently oppoſed by all ſorts of hereticks from the Gnoſticks to the Arians and Photinians) by the frequent Doxologies, or forms of giving glory to Chriſt, in the very ſame ſtyle as the Jews, (from whom thoſe forms are taken) cuſtomarily and ſolemnly made uſe of, to acknowledge the God of Iſrael to be the eternal God, (ſee Note on Rom. 9. c.) By all which and much more it appears, how impertinent and unneceſſary it was for the orthodox to feign and forge theſe words, and withal, how eaſie for their enemies to have diſproved them, and detected their forgery, if they had attempted it; and how much more temptation there was on the hereticks reticks ſide to free themſelves from the importunity of this place, by raſing that out of their Bibles, which could not otherwiſe be perſuaded to comply with their pretenſions. And accordingly, as in S. Cyprian, (who wrote before Arius was born, and conſequently before the time in which there could be any motive to have made this inſertion) the words are diſtinctly found, l. De Unit. Eccleſ. Dicit dominus, Ego & Pater unum ſumus, & iterum de Patre & Filio & Spiritu ſancto ſcriptum eſt, Et hi tres unum ſunt, The Lord ſaith, I and my Father are one, and again of the Father, Son and holy Ghoſt it is written, And theſe three are one. And in like manner Tertullian Contra Praxeam, Qui tres unum ſunt, Which three are one. So it is confeſſed of S. Hierom, that he aſſerted the truth of our reading from the Greek Copies which he had, and defended it againſt all, publickly complaining, and conteſting it, that in thoſe Copies where it was wanting, it was omitted or raſed out by the fraud of hereticks: and ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, that the hereticks did erade that place. And this was ſo far from yielding matter of recrimination againſt the orthodox in thoſe days, that ſome learned men, who have expreſſed their opinion that the addition of theſe words is ſuppoſititious, have laid that to the Arians charge alſo, who, ſay they, from thence deſired to conclude, that the Father, Son, and Spirit are one only by conſent in this teſtimony, as the water and blood and ſpirit are ſaid to be. But with how little reaſon this is ſuſpected, appears already by what hath before been ſaid, and needs no farther anſwer or refuting. It were here eaſie to deduce the doctrine of this verſe, as it is moſt largely ſet down, from the tradition of the Church through all times. I ſhall only affix ſome few teſtimonies before the time of the firſt Council of Nice, ſince which there can be no place of diſpute. In the firſt Age, that of Clemens Romanus is obſervable, Ζῇ ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, God lives, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the holy Ghoſt. A teſtimony produced out of him by S. Baſil the Great, c. 29. Περὶ ἁγ. πνεύμ. where ſpeaking of the Doxology, as one eſpecial Apoſtolical tradition, and reckoning up the antients from whom it was derived, he urgeth this ſaying of Clemens for the uſe of it. In the ſecond Century we have Juſtin Martyr Apol. 2. pro Chriſtianis, who having mentioned the Father of righteouſneſs, he adds, Ἀλλ' ἐκεῖνόν τε καὶ παρ' αὐτοῦ υἱὸν ἐλθόντα—πνεῦμά τε τὸ προφητικὸν σεβόμεθα καὶ προσκυνοῦμεν, Him and the Son coming from him, and the prophetick Spirit we worſhip and adore. A tract alſo there is cited by Leontius Hieroſol. and by Euthymius owned as Juſtin's, Περὶ τῆς ἁγίας καὶ ὁμοουσίου τριάδος, of the holy and coeſſential Trinity, which, if genuine, will clear the whole matter: for there we have ὁ τῶν ἁπάντων Θεὸς ἐν παιδὶ καὶ υἱῷ καὶ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι γνωριζόμενος, the God of all, who is known in Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt: and of them all, τὰ τῆς αὐτῆς καὶ μιᾶς θείας μετέχοντα, τῆς αὐτῆς καὶ μιᾶς θεότητος ἠξίωνται, theſe three partake of one and the ſame eſſence, have one and the ſame divinity: and τὰ τρία πρόσωπα, three perſons, aſſerted and cited from S. Paul, 2 Cor. 13. 13. and from Chriſt, Mat. 28. 19. and μονὰς ἐν τριάδι νοεῖται, καὶ τριὰς ἐν μονάδι γνωρίζεται, Unity in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity. So again the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers ad Orthodoxos, under Juſtin's name, reſp. ad quæſt. 139. ἔστι δὲν ὁ Θεὸς τῇ συμπάρξει τῶν τριῶν θείων ὑποστάσεων τῶν διαφερουσῶν ἀλλήλων, οὐ τῇ οὐσίᾳ, ἀλλὰ τοῖς τῆς ὑπάρξεως τρόποις, There is one God in the coexiſtence of three divine ſubſiſtences, differing from one another not in eſſence, but in the manner of exiſtence. So Athenagoras in his Ambaſſy for the Chriſtians, who were by the heathens looked on as Atheiſts; Τίς οὐκ ἂν ὑποπήσαι λέγοντας Θεὸν πατέρα, καὶ υἱὸν Θεὸν, καὶ πνεῦμα ἅγιον, δεικνυμένους αὐνάμει καὶ τῇ ἐν τῇ ἑνώσει δυνάμει, καὶ τῇ ἐν τῇ τάξει διαίρεσιν, ἀκούσας Ἀθέους καλουμένους; Who would not wonder to hear them called Atheiſts, who acknowledge God the Father, God the Son, and God the holy Ghoſt, and demonſtrate their power in the Union, and their diſtinction in the order? So Clemens Alexand. in the concluſion of his Pædagogus, Τῷ μόνῳ πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ—σὺν καὶ τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, πάντα τὰ ἑνὶ—To the only Father and Son—with the holy Ghoſt, one in all things, &c. So in the third Century Origen is by S. Baſil. Περὶ πνεύματ. ἁγ. reckoned among the aſſertors of this tradition, l. 6. Comm. in Johan. τῇ θεότητι τῆς προσκυνήσεως τριάδος, the Deity of the Trinity, which is to be adored; and on the Romans, καὶ τῆς ἁγίας πνεύματος θεότητος, the Deity of the holy Ghoſt, So Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome cited by Athanaſius in Epiſt. de Decret. Synod. Nic. ἤτοι γὰρ τριάδα μὲν κηρυττομένην ὑπὸ τῶν θείας γραφῆς σαφῶς ἐπίσανται, Τριὰς δὲ θεὸς οὔτε παλαιᾶν οὔτε καινῇ διαθήκῃ κηρύττεται, Theſe, that is, the true diſciples of Chriſt, evidently know that the Trinity is preached by divine Scripture, but that three Gods are not preached by the Old or New Teſtament. So Tertullian againſt Praxeas, Deum unicum quidem, ſed cum œconomia, eſſe credendum: expaveſcunt ad œconomiam, numerum & diſpoſitionem Trinitatis diviſionem credunt Unitatis, quando Unitas ex ſemetipſo derivans Trinitatem non deſtruatur ab illa, ſed adminiſtretur, We are to believe one God, but with the œconomy, or adminiſtration: they are affrighted at the œconomy, and think the number and order of the Trinity is the diviſion of the Unity, when indeed the Unity deriving the Trinity from it ſelf is not deſtroyed by it, but adminiſtred. And, Ecce dico alium eſſe Patrem, alium Filium, alium Spiritum ſanctum; non tamen diverſitate alium, ſed diſtributione, nec diviſione alium, ſed diſtinctione, Lo I affirm the Father to be another, the Son another, the holy Ghoſt another; yet not another by diverſity, but by diſtribution, nor another by diviſion, but diſtinction. And, Qui tres unum ſunt, non unus, Quomodo dictum eſt, Ego & Pater unum ſumus, ad ſubſtantiæ unitatem, non ad numeri ſingularitatem, Theſe three are one (nature) not one (perſon) as it was ſaid, I and my Father are one, for the unity of the ſubſtance, not the ſingularity of the number. The like place out of S. Cyprian was before produced, and this text from 1 Joh. 5. made uſe of for the aſſerting it. And ſo we ſee the truth of what we find in the debates of the firſt Nicene Council, on which their decrees are founded, Chriſtum conſubſtantialem Filium Patri--juxta olim traditam Eccleſiæ Apoſtolicam fidem expreſſis teſtimoniis demonſtrantes, that the doctrine of the conſubſtantiality of Chriſt the Son to the Father--is by expreſs teſtimonies domonſtrated to be according to the Apoſtolick faith of old delivered to the Church: and that of Hoſius in the name of the Council, Trinitatem individuam, ineffabilem, unam divinitatem, & eandem ipſius eſſentiam eſſe credentes; & eandem confitemur juxta nobis ab initio traditam ipſius fidei dogmatum integritatem à Domino per ſanctos ejus Apoſtolos, & à ſanctis ejus Apoſtolis, & à ſanctis antiquis noſtris Patribus qui Apoſtolorum ſanctam fidem illibatam conſervaverunt, We believe the individual Trinity, the ineffable, one Godhead, and that the eſſence thereof is the ſame; and we confeſs it the ſame according to the integrity of the doctrines of the faith from the beginning delivered to us from our Saviour by his holy Apoſtles, and from his holy Apoſtles, and from our holy antient fathers, who conſerved the holy faith of the Apoſtles intire. So in * Athanaſius's Epiſtle to the Africans, telling them of the Acts of the Council, and of the decree of adding ὁμοούσιον τῷ πατρὶ τὸν υἱὸν, the conſubſtantiability of the Son with the Father, he adds, Οἱ δὲ ἐπίσκοποι οὐκ ἑαυτοῖς διέγνωτες τὰς λέξεις, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῶν παλαίων ἔχοντες τὴν μαρτυρίαν, οὕτως ἔγραψαν. Ἐπίσκοποι γὰρ ἦσαν ἀρχαῖοι περὶ ἑκατὸν τριάκοντα τε μάλιστα Ῥώμης καὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας πόλεως, οἳ ἠτιάσαντο τὸν τοιοῦτον λέγοντας τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ μὴ ὁμοούσιον τῷ πατρὶ, The Biſhops, in the Council, did not invent theſe words for themſelves, but having teſtimony from their fathers, thus they wrote. For there were antient Biſhops about one hundred and thirty years, before that Council, both of Rome and of this city, who reprehended thoſe who affirmed the Son to be a creature, and not conſubſtantial with the Father. Καὶ τοῦτο, ſaith he, ἐγίνωσκεν Εὐσέβιος ὁ γενόμενος Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Καισαρείας, πρότερον μὲν συμπέπτωκὼς τῇ Ἀρειανῇ αἱρέσει, ὕστερον δὲ ὑποσχόμενος τῇ ἐν Νικαίᾳ συνόδῳ, ἔγραψέ καὶ τοῖς ἰδίοις διαβεβαιούμενος, ὅτι καὶ τῶν παλαιῶν τινας λογίους καὶ ἐπιφανεῖς ἐπισκόπους καὶ συγγραφέας εὕρομεν, ἐπὶ τῆς παλαιᾶς καὶ τῆς νῦν θεότητος τοῦ τῆς Ὁμοουσίου χρησαμένους ὀνόματι, And this Euſebius Biſhop of Cæſarea acknowledged, who having formerly gone on in the Arian hereſie, but afterward ſubſcribed to the Council of Nice, wrote and confirmed it with his own words, ſaying, We have found ſome of the antients, conſiderable perſons, and eminent Biſhops and writers, which concerning the Divinity of the Father and the Son uſed the word Conſubſtantial. And theſe words of Euſebius are at length to be ſeen in his

* See Theodoret. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 7.

Epiſtle in Theodoret, l. 1. c. 11. All which being evidences of the doctrine of the Church before the Council of Nice, are of full force to demonſtrate that which I have now in hand, viz. that the Catholicks in their controverſie againſt the Arians had no occaſion to inſert theſe words, and that this was the doctrine of the Church before that Council of Nice. Much more might be added on this ſubject. This I have choſen to ſay, on ſo great an occaſion, once for all.

b. αἰτεῖσθαι κατὰ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ

V. 14. Ask any thing according to his will] Αἰτεῖσθαι κατὰ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ, asking according to God's will, ſeems to comprehend two things; the firſt in reſpect of the matter of his prayer, that that be according to God's will; and the ſecond in reſpect of the diſpoſition of the petitioner, that he duly behave himſelf in asking, according to God's will. For the former of theſe, the matter of the prayer, that muſt be according to the will of God: and ſo it may be two ways; Firſt by being not only perfectly lawful, and ſo not contrary to his will, (for ſo is every indifferent thing, which we have no reaſon to be confident that God will grant us upon our demand) but alſo good and acceptable in the ſight of God: ſuch is the gift of his Spirit, Luc. 11. 13. ſuch the increaſe of faith, which the Diſciples prayed for, meaning thereby God's gift of grace, ſo far as to enable them thus to grow and increaſe; not the habit, or degrees of the habit of that vertue, for thoſe are regularly to be acquired by our acts or exerciſes of that ſtrength which God beſtows, our making uſe of that talent intruſted to us, to which his promiſe of more grace is confined, whilſt from him that lays it up in a napkin he takes away that which he hath; nor again the acts of that vertue, for thoſe are no otherwiſe given us by God than as he gives us ſtrength to perform them, which the Apoſtle expreſſes by ἐνεργῶν τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ἐν ἡμῖν τὸ ἐνεργεῖν, Phil. 2. 13. his working in us to work or do, upon which the exhortation is founded of the κατεργάζεσθε, working, and working out our own ſalvation. Secondly, it may be according to his will, by being agreeable to his wiſdom, which always bounds and limits and determins his will. And thus a thing may be ſuppoſed to be three ways; Firſt, when that which is prayed for is not contrary to any decree of God, which being an act of his will, is alſo an efflux of his (incomprehenſible) wiſdom. This decree of God is to us expreſſed by God's oath paſt on any thing, which makes it immutable, Hebr. 6. 17. as when of the provokers, Hebr. 3. 18. God ſware that they ſhould not enter into Canaan: for in that caſe it was certain that neither Moſes's prayers for them, nor their own for themſelves, ſhould prevail to reverſe it, though that others, who did not thus provoke, ſhould thus enter, was perfectly acceptable to God, agreeable to his will and wiſdom. And ſo when the iniquity of the people is grown to ſuch a pitch that God decrees their exciſion (and the ſame may be ſaid of any particular man, that hath ſo fill'd up his meaſure) though Noah, Daniel and Job ſhould intercede, they ſhall not prevail for them. Secondly, when that which is prayed for is not foreſeen by God to be inconvenient or hurtful for him that prayeth for it; for if it be, in that caſe God's denying to grant the prayer is a greater mercy than the granting of it; He were an enemy if he would thus hear us to our ruin.

> Dii faciles: ——

The heathens could charge it on their Gods as too great a facileneſs to deſtroy whole cities by this means of granting men their wiſhes. Thirdly, when although that which is prayed for be good for the petitioners, yet ſomewhat elſe is better, and really more deſirable to them. And then thus to deny what is asked, and thus to exceed their asking, what is that but the divineſt and moſt advantagious way of granting it? And in that caſe God, that knows what we really moſt want, what is moſt truly agreeable to our deſires, being able to chuſe for us better than we for our ſelves, when he grants not our prayers in the kind, yet he grants them by way (not only of equivalence, but) of running over, denies us what we demand, and gives us what is more for our advantage; denies what is is good, but grants us that which is much better for us. Thus when Chriſt pray'd for the departure of that cup, his prayer was not heard, but in ſtead of it the angels ſent to ſtrengthen him, and enable him to drink it up, as that which was more for his and the world's advantage. And thus when S. Paul prayed thrice that the thorn in the fleſh ſhould depart from him, that prayer was not granted, but in ſtead of it that grace given which was ſufficient to enable him to ſupport that affliction; and that was better to him than the other: for God's ſtrength was perfected and magnified in him through that weakneſs, or affliction, viz. by his Chriſtian bearing of it. The ſecond thing, that which reſpects the diſpoſition or qualifications of the petitioner, may be reduced to theſe three branches; Firſt, that he be ſuch as to whom God's promiſes do belong, ſuch an one as performs his part of the Covenant of mercy, the pious Chriſtian liver, he that is a worſhipper of God, and doth his will: For otherwiſe God, which is a hearer of prayers indefinitely, is not the hearer of his; we know that God heareth not ſinners, If they incline to iniquity in their heart, the Lord will not hear them, when they make their long prayers, the Lord will hide his face, their hands are full of blood; they muſt waſh and make them clean before they have any title to God's hearing or anſwering their prayers. Secondly, that in that particular for which he prays, he apply himſelf only to God, and ſuch means as he knows to be acceptable to him. This is it which is called in S. James, asking in faith, c. 1. b. and is oppoſed to wavering (that is, doubting and demurring whether God's ways or his own are to be adhered to for the obtaining his end) and to the ἀνὴρ δίψυχος double-minded man, ver. 8. who ſending one mind, one will unto God in prayer, hath another for the moſt ungodly inſtruments, makes a ſecret addreſs unto them, which renders him there ἀκατάστατος, unſetled, and various, one while in the ways of God, and another while of the Devil, and, Let not ſuch an one think, ſaith the Apoſtle, that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord, v. 7. Thirdly, that his asking be joined with importunity; for to that qualification of our prayers the promiſe is expreſsly made, in the Parable of the widow and the unjuſt judge, and in the joining together of asking, ſeeking, knocking, to which the having, finding, opening unto, are promiſed by Chriſt; by this importunity meaning a continuance and perſeverance in our prayers for that which we want, and when at the firſt asking the mercy is not conferr'd, repeating and re-inforcing the requeſt, waiting upon the Lord which hideth his face, and never giving over the importunity until the requeſt be graciouſly anſwered by God. All theſe being thus ſet down are the ſeveral ingredients to make up the intire qualification ſignified hereby, praying according to God's will; and to them that are thus qualified in each branch this confidence here belongs, that whatſoever they ſhall thus ask, God will hear them. By which it appears in what ſenſe it may be deemed to be required of the petitioner to believe that his petition ſhould be granted, viz. only according to the importance of theſe words thus explicated. It being certain that no man is bound to believe that which is not true, or to believe that abſolutely which depends upon ſo many conditions, upon performing of which, as he lawfully may, nay, (as a duty of faith to God's promiſes) is obliged, and muſt believe that what he thus prays ſhall be granted; ſo if he perform them not, he is not obliged to believe that his prayers ſhall be granted him: and if through a great meaſure of humility and undervaluing his own performances he chance to err, and think himſelf unqualified when he is not unqualified, and conſequently want this confidence toward God, that he will hear his prayers, when he hath (if he knew it) due grounds for that confidence, it is not to be imagined that the want of that confidence, or the exceſs of that humility, which is ſo acceptable in the ſight of God, ſhould render him or his prayers unacceptable and ineffectual to him. And accordingly αἰτείτω ἐν πίστει, Let him ask in faith, in S. James chap. 1. 6. muſt no otherwiſe be interpreted.

c. ἁμαρτία εἰς θάνατον

V. 16. Sin unto death] What is meant by ἁμαρτία εἰς θάνατον, a ſin unto death, may, I ſuppoſe, be beſt learned from what we read in the Law, of him that ſins contemptuouſly, to whom death without mercy was preſcribed. This was deſcribed, Heb. 10. 28. Ἀθετήσας τις νόμον Μωσέως,

He

He that ſet at nought Moſes's Law died without mercy, upon a ſufficient proof of it. And ſo he that is guilty of that, and, proportionably to him, he that uſeth the Son of God, now under the Goſpel, after that manner, καταπατήσας treading or trampling upon the Son of God, v. 29. ſetting his commands and terrors at nought, as there he is thought worthy of ſorer puniſhment, ſo here his ſin may fitly be ſaid to be εἰς θάνατον, unto death. What this contempt is, may appear by the ſecond Council of Nice, which expounds the ſin unto death by ἀδιόρθωτον μένειν, to continue unreformed and incorrigible after all the admonitions and cenſures of the Church; of which as there were ſeveral degrees, ſo he that did not reform upon the firſt was, within ſome time, to be put under the ſecond, or higher, and not reforming then, was to fall under the third, which was wont to be called by the Jews, Schammatha, which ſignifies there is death, a puniſhment proportioned to this ſin, and from the title thereof this ſeems to be called here a ſin unto death. Not that every deliberate or wilful ſin is here ſo ſtyled (though that alſo be mortiferous without repentance) for of this ſort is ἁμαρτία ſin, (indefinitely taken, according to the uſe of this writer; ſee Note on c. 3. a.)

πᾶσα ἀδικία ἁμαρτία ἐστὶ and according to that which follows, v. 17. πᾶσα ἀδικία ἁμαρτία ἐστὶ every iniquity is ſin, and yet every ſuch, as it there follows, is not εἰς θάνατον, unto death in this ſenſe; but the phraſe peculiarly belongs to a wilful ſin (to which, without repentance or reformation, eternal perdition is denounced) heightned and aggravated farther with the addition of obſtinacy againſt all perſuaſions and means of melting, which renders him hopeleſs and own'd to ruin, and there is nothing left for him, but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which ſhall devour the adverſaries, τοὺ ὑπεναντίους theſe that walk thus contrary to God, reſiſt his admonitions, his grace, all his methods of reducing them. Of theſe the Apoſtle here ſaith, οὐ λέγω ἵνα ἐρωτήσῃ I ſay not that he, that is, the Chriſtian brother, ſhall pray for ſuch an one. Which words may ſeem very cautiouſly ſet, not that he forbids, but only doth not command to pray for them, or doth not promiſe any good ſucceſs to the prayers that are offered up for ſuch an one. Agreeably to what is ſaid of the ἑκουσίως ἁμαρτανόντες, c. 10. 26. thoſe that ſin wilfully after the receiving the knowledge of the truth, (where the wilfulneſs is added to the ἁμαρτάνειν, the ſinning deliberately, and denotes the contumacious continuing in any ſuch ἁμαρτία, or deliberate ſin) that οὐκ ἔτι ἀπολείπεται θυσία, there remains no longer any ſacrifice, περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, for ſuch ſins ſo wilfully continued in, noting thereby the ſuſpenſion of the prayers of the Church (or the inefficaciouſneſs of them) which are anſwerable to the ſacrifices of old time; as when of obdurate ſinners it is ſaid, that if Noah, Daniel and Job, the three great examples of powerful interceſſion, were there a praying for them, they ſhould not be available for the pardon of ſuch. That ſuch as theſe were deprived of the benefit of the prayers of the Church, and out of meer pity delivered up to Satan, as the only remaining charitable method, by that means to rouze and awake them out of ſin, is ſufficiently known in the Antient Canons. And it is the advice of Clemens Alexandrinus, Str. l. 7. concerning ſuch inſenſate, incorrigible ſinners, that we ſhould pray to God for ſome temporal puniſhments upon them, as the only reſerve behind to make impreſſion on them. And that was done in the anathema or Cherem, where they uſed execrations upon them, not as an act of hatred, but kindneſs toward them, εἰς ὄλεθρον σαρκὸς to the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of the Lord. Where ſtill it is not defined unlawful to pray for ſuch, either for their pardon, or for their repentance to qualifie them for it, but they are only look'd on as excommunicate perſons, that muſt not be encouraged with admiſſion to the publick prayers of the Church or the privileges of Chriſtians, but marked out and branded and ſhamed to reformation.

V. 21. Idols] The idols that are here mentioned are ſure thoſe that the Gnoſticks uſed. To which purpoſe there is an eminent place in Euſebius, Οἱ δὲ καθ' αὐτὸν μέλιτος αἵρεσιν, ἣ Χριστιανῶν φιλοσοφίαν ὑποκεινόμενοι, ἧς μὲ ἔδοξαν ἀπωσάμενοι αὖθις τὰ εἴδωλα δεισιδαιμονίας, εἰδὲν ἦτλον αὖθις ἐπιλαμβάνονται, καταπίπτοντες ἐπὶ γεγραὰς καὶ εἰκόνας αὐτῶν τε τῶν Σίμωνος καὶ τῆς αὐτοῦ ἑλκωθείσης Ἑλένης, θυμιάμασί τε καὶ θυσίαις καὶ σπονδαῖς τύτοις θρησκεύειν ἐπιχειροῦντες. Τὰ δὲ τύτων ἀπόῤῥητότερα —— Thoſe that were of the hereſie of Simon Magus, pretended to be of the Chriſtian religion, and to have forſaken the ſuperſtition of the heathens in worſhipping of idols, and yet came back again to that which they pretended to have forſaken, falling down to the pictures and ſtatues of Simon and Helene, and by ſacrifice and incenſe and drink-offerings doing adoration to them. And beſides theſe, many abominable impurities, not fit to be named, there were among them. All which together may well be the εἴδωλα, idols, which the Chriſtians are here warned to beware of.

THE [a] Second [b]* EPISTLE OF † JOHN.

a. b. * Catholick or General Epiſtle, Ἐπιστολὴ Καθολικὴ

a. Ἐπιστολὴ Ἰωάννου

THat this ſecond (and ſo likewiſe the third) Epiſtle of John was not written by John the Apoſtle, is conjectured in the Poſthumous Annotations of the learned Hugo Grotius, and that much more tolerably than what hath been mentioned concerning the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter. There many changes were to be made in the Text to make the conjecture paſſable; but here all circumſtances of the Text do fitly enough concur to make it poſſible that John, which was by S. John the Apoſtle made Biſhop of the Jewiſh Chriſtians at Epheſus, ſhould be the Author of theſe Epiſtles. Of that John the antient Author of the Conſtit. l. 7. c. 45. makes mention, that as Timothy was made Biſhop of Epheſus by S. Paul (that is, Biſhop of the Gentile Chriſtians there by the Apoſtle of the Gentiles) ſo Ἰωάννης ὑπ' ἐμοῦ Ἰωάννου John was ordained by John, that is, a ſecond John made Biſhop of the Jewiſh Church there by John the Apoſtle of the circumciſion, Gal. 2. 9. who planted the Jewiſh Church at Epheſus. That this ſecond John, the Biſhop of Epheſus, was the writer of theſe Epiſtles, the chief argument that is produced is that from the title, ὁ Πρεσβύτερος, The Elder, by which this writer calls himſelf, and not Ἀπόστολος Apoſtle. A ſecond from the incomplete reception that theſe Epiſtles had in the firſt ages, being not acknowledged by ſome Churches for a while. A third from Diotrephes's oppoſing this Author, 3 Ep. 9. which it is thought ſtrange that any Chriſtian ſhould do to an Apoſtle. But theſe arguments have very ſmall force in them toward the inferring the Concluſion. For firſt, πρεσβύτερος, Elder, being a word of honour and dignity, and belonging, in the New Teſtament, to the ſupreme Ruler of any Church (and to none elſe, that we can diſcern: ſee Act. 11. Note b.) it may very fitly belong to an Apoſtle reſiding and preſiding in any Church (as it is certain S. John had done at Epheſus for ſome time) and the rather, being ὁ Πρεσβύτερος, the Elder, by way of eminence. And this will be more probable, if it be conſidered what account hath formerly been given (Note on Tit. of 1 Joh.) of the character of this Apoſtle's ſtyle, who uſeth not in his Goſpel (and accordingly it is in his former Epiſtle, which is acknowledged to be his) to name or mention himſelf, unleſs it be by ſome circumlocution. And ſuch is the ὁ Πρεσβύτερος, the Elder, here. Nay ſecondly, the perſecutions which were at this time againſt the Church, and wherein S. John was peculiarly involved, might make it prudent thus to conceal his name, and diſguiſe it under this title. Or thirdly, whatſoever was the reaſon of wholly omitting his name or title in the firſt Epiſtle, may here be of force for his omitting it thus far here. And this will be a ground of anſwer to the ſecond reaſon alſo. For though thoſe Churches, whither theſe Epiſtles were ſent, knew from whom they came, and accordingly never denied them reception; yet having not ſo publick a character upon them as others had, and being not own'd by the Author in the title, as all S. Paul's (unleſs that to the Hebrews) were, this might well be the cauſe that they had not ſo univerſal a reception at firſt, which notwithſtanding, it yet appears that ſoon after it was received into the Canon, and this inſcription prefix'd to it by the Church, Ἰωάννου τοῦ Ἀποστόλου Ἐπιστολὴ καθολικὴ δευτέρα, The ſecond Catholick Epiſtle of John the Apoſtle. As for the third reaſon, that of this Author's being oppoſed by Diotrephes, which is thought to be a proof that he was not an Apoſtle, this is of no validity, becauſe the hereticks of thoſe times, the Gnoſticks, are known to have oppoſed and rejected the Apoſtles themſelves. So of Alexander S. Paul ſaith, he hath greatly withſtood our words, 2 Tim. 4. 15. So of the Gnoſticks we read, Jude 11. that they were guilty of the gainſaying of Coreh, and that, we know, conſiſted in their oppoſing Moſes and Aaron, and ſo in the parallel muſt denote the oppoſing the Apoſtles, or Governours of the Church, ſent immediately by Chriſt; and that that is the meaning of the βλασφημοῦσι δόξας, ſpeaking evil of glories, Jude 8. and 2 Pet. 2. 10. as of Alexander's blaſpheming 1 Tim. 1. 20. ſee Note on Jude d. To the ſame purpoſe alſo it is that S. Paul, having ſpoken of the Gnoſticks, 1 Cor. 8. through the whole chapter, proceeds immediately, c. 9. to the vindicating his Apoſtleſhip, and the privileges thereof; and ſo Gal. 1. and ſpeaking to Titus of theſe deceivers, he calls them ἀνυπόδικτους, Tit. 1. 10. refractory, diſobedient. Of theſe 'tis Ignatius's affirmation, that they took upon them to know more than their Biſhops, εἴ τις γνοῴη πλέον τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου, ἔφθαρται, If any know more than the Biſhop, he is corrupted, Ep. ad Polycarp. And not only ſo, but of Marcus's followers (a progeny of theſe Gnoſticks) Irenæus, plainly affirms, l. 1. c. 9. (and from him Epiphanius l. 1. hær. 14, and 34.) that they were ſo arrogant, that they contemned the Apoſtles themſelves, and l. 3. c. 2. dicentes ſe non ſolùm Presbyteris, ſed etiam Apoſtolis exiſtentes ſapientiores, ſaying they were wiſer, not only than the Presbyters, or Biſhops, but even than the Apoſtles themſelves. Which takes away all force from this argument. And then nothing hinders but that the Inſcription of this Epiſtle may be true, and John the Apoſtle be determined to be the Author of it. And that will be more probable, if we obſerve how agreeable the mattter of this is to the former Epiſtle, fortifying them in the truth, v. 4. in the practice of charity, v. 5. and warning them of the Gnoſtick deceivers, or Antichriſt, v. 7.

b. Καθολικὴ

How theſe Epiſtles ſhould be called Καθολικαὶ, may perhaps be queſtion'd, being not, as that of S. James and S. Peter appeared to be, addreſſed to the Jews of the diſperſion univerſally or indefinitely, but one of them ἐκλεκτῇ Κυρίᾳ, ordinarily rendred, To the elect Lady, and the other to Gaius, a particular perſon. But to this it may be ſaid, Firſt, that it is not certain that theſe are two particular perſons to whom theſe Epiſtles belong (ſee Note a. on this Epiſt.) Secondly, that to whomſoever they were firſt addreſs'd, they were yet deſigned to be tranſcribed by them and ſent to others alſo, and that is the meaning of Catholick (the ſame that of ἐγκύκλιοι ἐπιστολαὶ) viz. that theſe Epiſtles were deſigned to go from one Church unto another, and were not confined unto any, (ſee Note b. on the title of S. James.) But then thirdly, another notion of Καθολικὴ Catholick there may poſſibly be, to ſignifie the univerſal reception of theſe Epiſtles in the Church. At the firſt, beſide thoſe Epiſtles which carry S. Paul's name in the front of them, there were but few that had an univerſal reception, only the firſt of Peter, and the firſt of John, the reſt were not ſo univerſally received into the Canon of Scripture. Hereupon thoſe two ſo received might at the firſt be called Catholick (and ſo κανονικαὶ Canonical alſo) in oppoſition to thoſe others which were not ſo Catholickly or univerſally entertained: And then, when upon farther evidence made to the Church theſe others were without contradiction received alſo, this word Καθολικὴ might in like manner by the Church be added to their Inſcriptions, to ſignifie that now they were univerſally received alſo, that is, accepted into the Canon.

S. JOHN

Paraphraſe.

1. THE Elder unto the [a] elect Lady and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not only I, but alſo all they that have known the truth;]

1. John the Apoſtle and governour of the whole Church of Aſia, to the Church (unnamed) and to all the Chriſtians therein, whom I value and love in Chriſt, and not I only, but all other true Chriſtians;

2. For the truth's ſake which dwelleth in us, and ſhall be with us for ever:]

2. Becauſe of the Chriſtian profeſſion, the ſame in you that remaineth in us, and ſhall do ſo, I pray and hope, for ever:

3. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Son of the Father, in truth and love.]

3. I ſend you greeting, and wiſh you all gifts, and mercy, and proſperity from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and particularly that you may, in deſpight of all ſolicitations of hereticks and ſchiſmaticks, continue conſtant in the acknowledgment of the truth of the Goſpel, and in the exerciſe of all works of charity to one another.

4. I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.]

4. Some of the Chriſtians which belong to thee I lately met with, where I was, and diſcerned them to ſtand conſtant in the truth of the Chriſtian doctrine, agreeably to that commandment given to us by God the Father, This is my beloved ſon, hear him. Mat. 17. 5. when Peter, and James, and I were in the mount with him; and this conſtancy of theirs was the more conſiderable, becauſe of the great ſtore of falſe doctrine that is now every where abroad in the Church: and this was matter of ſpecial joy to me. See Note on 1 Joh. 2. a.

5. And now I beſeech thee, Lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment to thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another.]

5. And now all that I have to beg of you is, that to the profeſſion of the truth ye add the practice of Chriſtian charity, that we may all live in unity, and peace, and concord one toward another. And this is no new commandment of mine, but that which Chriſt required of all his diſciples, and to which ye are moſt ſtrictly obliged by being Chriſtians.

6. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye ſhould walk in it.]

6. And this conſiſts in your doing what Chriſt hath preſcribed: and his preſcription is, that we ſhould not hearken to new doctrines, but go on in the courſe in which we were firſt ſet by him, and his Apoſtles, the preachers of the faith unto us. From which they that depart fall into faction, and malice, and uncharitableneſs againſt all others.

7. For many deceivers are entred into the world, who confeſs not * that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh. This is a deceiver, and an Antichriſt.]

7. For many Impoſtors are come among you, who will not acknowledge Chriſt to be the Meſſias, (ſee Note on 1 Joh. 2. b.) and whoſoever doth ſo, is an Impoſtor, and an Antichriſt, ſuch as were propheſied of, that now they ſhould come: ſee 1 Joh. 2. c.

* Jeſus Chriſt coming in the fleſh, Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐρχόμενον

8. Look to your ſelves, that † we loſe not thoſe things which we have wrought, but * that we receive a full reward.]

* receive λάβητε

8. Take care then that by relapſe you deſtroy not all, and forfeit the reward of your good beginnings, for want of perſeverance, but that continuing to the end, ye may receive a complete reward or crown.

9. Whoſoever tranſgreſſeth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the Father and the Son.]

9. Every one that now apoſtatizeth, and falls off from the doctrine of Chriſt to the corruptions of the Gnoſticks, forſaketh God himſelf and all piety, (ſee Note on 1 Joh. 2. d.) and he that adhereth and ſticketh faſt to the orthodox profeſſion, now it is ſo oppoſed, ſhall be looked on as a truly pious and Chriſtian perſon.

10. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houſe, [b] neither bid him God ſpeed.]

10. If any man bring you any doctrine beſide this, the one doctrine of Chriſt, give no kind of admiſſion, or ear, or encouragement to him.

11. For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, * is partaker of his evil deeds.]

* contributes to κοινωνεῖ

11. He that doth not diſcountenance him as much as is poſſible, aſſiſts and encourages him.

12. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink, but I truſt to come unto you and † ſpeak face to face, that our joy may be full.]

† mouth to mouth to talk with you, στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλῆσαι

12. What I have more to ſay to you, I do chuſe not to commit to this publick way of Epiſtle, but refer it till I come unto you, which I hope will be e'er long, to our mutual comfort.

13. The children of thy * elect ſiſter greet thee. Amen.]

* ſiſter the choſen τῆς ἀδελφῆς σου τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς

13. The members of thy fellow-Church from which I write, ſend thee greeting: ſee Note a.

Annotations on the ſecond Epiſtle of JOHN.

a. ἐκλεκτῇ ἀδελφῇ ἐκλεκτῇ

V. 1. Elect] That ἐκλεκτὴ ſignifies a Church, and that συνεκλεκτὴ is uſed in that ſenſe for another, or ſiſter Church, in the ſame manner as here, v. 13. ἀδελφὴ ἐκλεκτὴ, hath been ſaid Note on 1 Pet. 5. 13. d. to which I ſhall add the teſtimony of S. Jerom, Epiſt. 11. ad Agerachiam, where having mentioned the Text in the Canticles, ch. 6. una eſt columba mea, perfecta mea, una eſt matri ſuæ, electa genitrici ſuæ, my dove is one, my perfect one is the only daughter of her mother, the elect to her that brought her forth, he adds, Ad quam ſcribit Johannes Epiſtolam, Senior electæ Dominæ & filiis ejus, to whom John writes an Epiſtle, The Elder to the elect Lady and her children. Now for Κυρία, it may fitly be ſet to ſignifie no no more than τῇ δέσποινα, an appellation fit to be uſed when the name is either unknown or concealed; for in that caſe, and not only as a title of honour and dignity, 'tis ordinary to ſay Κύριε (which probably is grown to be in Engliſh Cyr or Syr:) ſo Joh. 20. 15. the woman taking Chriſt for the Gardiner, and addreſſing her ſpeech to him as one whoſe name was not known to her, begins with Κύριε, Syr. But beſide this, it is obſervable that both Κυρία among the Athenians, and Curia among the Romans, ſignifies the very ſame that ἐκκλησία and Eccleſia doth, that is, the aſſembly, both as that ſignifies the Perſons congregated either for civil or ſacred uſes, and the Place where they thus meet. See the worthy Sir Henry Spelman's Gloſſary, p. 195. And then the words will be beſt rendred, the elect Church or Congregation, ſome which here is not thought fit to be mentioned by name, or particularly. That he names not this Church, may be for the ſame reaſon for which among others he names not himſelf, any otherwiſe than ὁ πρεσβύτερος, the elder, viz. becauſe of the perſecutions that were then abroad in the world. And indeed that both this and the third Epiſtle were deſigned to be ſent clancularly, and purpoſely avoided the eyes of men, appears by the cloſe common to both, that he had many things to write, but would not commit them to paper and ink, 2 Joh. 12. and 3 Joh. 13. in reſpect of the hazard that that might bring either on them or him, in caſe they were intercepted, or fell into other hands than thoſe to which he deſigned them. Agreeable to this it is, that we here have mention of the τέκνα αὐτῆς her children, v. 1. and in the like manner, v. 13. by which phraſe the Chriſtians of any Church are fitly ſignified, the title of mother being ſo proper for a Church, and ſo uſed Gal. 4. 26. the mother of us all. But what Church it is that was here deſigned, or what that other, v. 13. we have no means to define, any farther than by remembring that all Aſia being (as far as the Jewiſh Chriſtians there) the ſpecial charge and province of S. John, and there being ſeven chief Churches or Metropolitical Sees in that circuit, enumerated Rev. 1. 11. it is moſt probable that S. John being in one of theſe Churches at this time, he wrote unto the other. And if Epheſus were that to which he wrote (from thence to be communicated to the reſt) there will then be another ground of calling it Κυρία, as that literally ſignifies chief in power or authority, Epheſus being indeed the chief Metropolis of all Aſia.

b. χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε

V. 10. Neither bid him God ſpeed] This form of interdict here is an imitation of the practice of the Jews in their חרם or anathema againſt the מוסרין or apoſtates, who were to be excluded not only from commerce, but from the ſmalleſt kind of ordinary ſalutation.

THE Third * EPISTLE OF a JOHN.

* Epiſtle general καθολικὴ

Paraphraſe.

1. THE Elder unto the well-beloved [a] Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

2. Beloved, * I wiſh above all things that thou mayeſt proſper, and be in health, even as thy ſoul proſpereth.]

* I pray εὔχομαι

2. It is my fervent prayer for thee, that it may be with thee in all outward things as it is in reſpect of thy ſoul, that every thing may ſucceed proſperouſly with thee.

3. For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came, and teſtified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkeſt in the truth.]

3. For it was great matter of comfort and joy to me, when the Chriſtians that came out of Judæa, came and told me of the ſincerity of thy Chriſtian courſe, (ſee Note on 1 Cor. 13. g.) and gave me aſſurance of thy perſeverance.

4. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth.]

4. There is nothing that I more delight in, in the world, or of which I more abundantly rejoice, than to hear that thoſe which have been converted by me, do adhere to that profeſſion, and live after a true Chriſtian manner.

5. Beloved, thou doſt † faithfully whatſoever thou doſt to the brethren, and to ſtrangers,]

† a faithful thing πιστὸν

5. It is moſt Chriſtianly done of thee to do as thou doſt toward the poor Chriſtians, and ſtrangers that have been among you, Rom. 16. 23.

6. Which have born witneſs of thy charity before the Church, whom if thou * bring forward on their journey † after a godly ſort, thou ſhalt do well.]

* furniſh for προπέμψας

† ſo as may be worthy of God ἀξίως τοῦ θεοῦ

6. Who gave publick teſtimony of thy charity ſhewed to them. And as then thou didſt, ſo it will be a pious work in thee to help them now again, and furniſh them for their travail (ſee 1 Cor. 16. a.) in publiſhing the Goſpel, and that in a Chriſtian manner, and for Chriſt's ſake, whoſe miniſters they are.

7. Becauſe that for his names ſake they [b] went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles.]

7. For 'tis on Chriſt's errand that they have taken this journey, that is, to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt; or, for the teſtimony which they have given to the Goſpel, that is, becauſe they have publiſhed the Chriſtian faith, they have been driven out of their Country, that is, Judæa, by the Jews, and being ſo, they are alſo look'd on ſhily by the Gentile Chriſtians where they come, v. 10. caſt out by their Country-men the Jews for being Chriſtians, and not entertained with any kindneſs by the Gentile Chriſtians for being Jews.

8. We therefore ought to receive ſuch, that we * might be fellow-helpers to the † truth.]

* may become fellow-laborers with ἵνα συνεργοὶ

† or Church, for the King's MS. reads ἐκκλησίᾳ ſοὶ γινώμεθα τῇ

8. And therefore 'tis but neceſſary that they be relieved by ſome, and they that ſhall relieve them, ſhall thereby have the comfort of co-operating and contributing their part toward the propagating of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

9. I wrote * unto the Church, but [c] Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.]

* or ſomewhat to — for the K.'s MS. reads τὶ τῇ

9. To this purpoſe I wrote to the Church, but Diotrephes, that would fain be Biſhop there, gives no heed to my Letters.

10. Wherefore if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doth, † prating againſt us with malitious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himſelf receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and caſteth them out of the Church.]

† baffling us with wicked ſpeeches λόγοις πονηροῖς φλυαροῦν ἡμᾶς

10. For which contempt of his, I ſhall at my coming uſe ſome ſeverity upon him, and teach him to uſe me better, eſpecially ſeeing he is not content thus to ſlight and baffle me, and to reject the Chriſtian Jews that come thither, but farther reſtrains others that would not have been ſo unhoſpitable, will not permit the Gentile Chriſtians to receive them to their communion, but utterly rejects them out of the Church.

11. Beloved, * follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doth good, is of God: but he that doth evil, hath not ſeen God.]

* do not imitate the evil, but the good μὴ μιμοῦ τὸ κακὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀγαθὸν

11. Brethren, be not ye followers of theſe evil ways, but contrariwiſe follow all Chriſtian meekneſs towards the Jewiſh Chriſtians, Rom. 14. 1. He that is kind and merciful, and willing to receive all to communion, is of a Chriſtian temper, and ſo ſhews himſelf to be: but he that is malicious, and proud, and ſeparates from others, knows not what belongs to Chriſtianity.

12. Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth it ſelf: yea and we alſo bear record, † and ye know that our record is true.]

† or thou knoweſt, for the K.'s MS. reads οἶδας

12. Demetrius indeed a Gentile convert hath a very good teſtimony from all men that know him, and indeed hath done many things which teſtifie more fully of him than the ſuffrages of men can do: And the ſame teſtimony I and others with me give him alſo, and ye know that what we ſay is true.

See 2 Joh. 12.

13. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee.

14. But I truſt I ſhall ſhortly ſee thee, and we ſhall * ſpeak face to face. Peace be to thee. † Our friends ſalute thee. Greet the friends by name.

* talk mouth to mouth στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλήσομεν † or the brethren, for the King's MS. reads ἀδελφοὶ

Annotations on the third Epiſtle of JOHN.

V. 1. Gaius] Who this Gaius was cannot certainly be affirmed. That it is the ſame that is mentioned by S. Paul, Rom. 16. 23. may ſeem probable by that which is there ſaid of him, that he was ξένος μου, the perſon that entertained Paul, and the whole Church, or generality of Chriſtians, in like manner as here, ver. 5. Gaius is ſaid to have been very kind to the brethren and to the ſtrangers, and to have furniſhed them for their journey in a very liberal manner. But one circumſtance there is which is of force againſt this. This Gaius, Rom. 16. appears to be a Corinthian, and ſo to be mentioned there (from whence S. Paul writes that Epiſtle) as his hoſt, and ſo as an inhabitant, not a ſtranger there. And then there is little reaſon to doubt but that this is he that is mentioned 1 Cor. 1. 14. as one that was there converted to the faith, and baptized by Paul, whereas the Gaius here is by S. John called his ſon or τέκνον, v. 4. which ſignifies him to have been begotten in the faith, that is, converted by S. John. Another of that name there is mentioned, Act. 19. 29. of whom it is ſaid that he was συνέκδημος τοῦ Παύλου fellow-traveller of Paul, and this was a Macedonian, and of the city of Derbe, Act. 20. 4. and ſo diſtinct from him of Corinth alſo, and probably from him that is mentioned here, who could not have been τέκνον been ſo fit for the employment, v. 5. of entertaining the brethren and ſtrangers, if he were employed in preaching the Goſpel, as a fellow-traveller of S. Paul. It remains therefore that this Gaius here be ſome third perſon, of a Roman name (Gaius and Caius being all one, and a very common and vulgar name, of which therefore it is not ſtrange that there ſhould be three diſtinct perſons mentioned in the New Teſtament) and ſo ſome Gentile Chriſtian, an eminent member of that Church, v. 9. to which S. John ſeems to have written his ſecond Epiſtle (ſee Note on 2 Joh. a.) no where elſe, but in this place, mentioned in the New Teſtament.

b. ἐξῆλθον ὑπὲρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ

V. 7. Went forth] The word ἐξῆλθον, went out, is capable of two notions. Firſt, it may ſignifie a voluntary going out, and then ὑπὲρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, for the name of Chriſt, muſt ſignifie their preaching and propagating the Goſpel, for which they took their travail from their own country. But ἐξέρχεσθαι may ſignifie alſo a violent ejection. So Mat. 17. 21. ſpeaking of the ejection or caſting out of a devil, the like phraſe is uſed, τοῦτο τὸ γένος οὐκ ἐκπορεύεται, this kind goeth not out, by going out meaning ejection. Thus נפק ſignifies in Syriack to go out, and to be caſt out alſo; and accordingly Mat. 8. 12. the Syriack hath נפקון, exibunt, they ſhall go out, but the Greek ἐκβληθήσονται, they ſhall be caſt out. According to which it is that ἐκβάλλειν and ἐκπέμπειν, to caſt out and ſend out, are uſed promiſcuouſly the one for the other: ſee Note on Mat. 9. i. And then going out for Chriſt's name, is being baniſhed or caſt out of their country for the profeſſion of the faith of Chriſt, which we know the Jewiſh Chriſtians were, Act. 8. 1. and 11. 19.

c. διοτρεφὴς

V. 9. Diotrephes] This Diotrephes was a Chriſtian that from Gentiliſm received the faith in that Church to which Gaius belonged, and to which the Apoſtle ſeems to have written the former Epiſtle commendatory of the brethren, ver. 9. From hence appears that which was intimated, Rom. 14. 1. that the Gentile Chriſtians were in part guilty of the breach betwixt the Jewiſh Chriſtians and them, and not only the Jews. There it ſeems, as the Jewiſh judged and condemned the Gentile Chriſtians for uſing their Chriſtian liberty, ſo the Gentile Chriſtians deſpiſed, and ſet at nought the Jewiſh. Here it ſeems the matter was driven higher, that is, they did not ſo freely relieve the Jewiſh Chriſtians that were driven out of their country for the faith, as they ought in Chriſtian liberality to have done. That ſeems to be the meaning of ver. 7. that the Jewiſh Chriſtians that were driven out of Judæa for the profeſſion of the faith (ſee Note b.) were not now in this Church of Aſia ſo liberally and hoſpitably treated as the laws of Chriſtian charity obliged, and as belonged to them as ſtrangers, v. 5. to furniſh them for their journy, ver. 6. Secondly, they were, ſome of them, ſo far guilty in this matter, that when S. John wrote his letters of commendation for them, theſe were not effectual, Diotrephes rejected, or gave no reception or heed to his letters; and by this means the reſt of the Church alſo, being otherwiſe willing to have entertained them, were detained from doing it, ver. 10. Thirdly, he not only denied them that hoſpitable reception and relief, but utterly rejected them from their communion, caſt them out of the Church, ver. 10. Whether this Diotrephes were a Biſhop in this Church it may be doubted, or whether only one that immoderately affected that dignity, or aſſumed it, not belonging to him. φιλοπρωτεύων may ſignifie one that loves and uſeth immoderately this dignity when he hath it, and one that ſeeks it inordinately, or aſſumeth it. It is poſſible that he was a Biſhop, and being ſo did ἐκβάλλειν caſt out the Jewiſh Chriſtians out of the Church, and that in ſpight of S. John's commendatory letters, who had an Apoſtolical power over him, and all other Biſhops of Aſia. But it may alſo be very probable, that as the Hereticks of thoſe times did contemn and affront the Biſhops and Apoſtles themſelves, ſo this Diotrephes might do, without having any real authority in the Church, but only aſſuming it, as αὐθάδης and τολμητὴς, a preſumptuous, confident, bold perſon.

* Jude the Apoſtle

a. Ἰούδα — IT is but agreeable to the former conjectures in the poſthumous Annotations of the moſt learned H. Grotius, to determine here alſo, as in the ſecond of Peter, and ſecond and third of John, that the writer was not Jude, one of the twelve Apoſtles, and accordingly to affix it to Jude a Biſhop of Jeruſalem. But of this there is no proof offered, ſave only, firſt, That he calls himſelf δοῦλος a ſervant, not ἀπόστολος Apoſtle, of Jeſus Chriſt. Secondly, That it was not tranſlated into all languages, and received into all Churches. Thirdly, That in the Catalogue of the Biſhops of Jeruſalem, the fifteenth that is named is called Judas. To the firſt of theſe it may be ſufficient to anſwer, that as ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ, an Apoſtle of Jeſus, ſignifies one ſent upon the ſervices of Chriſt with commiſſion from him, ſo it is in effect all one with δοῦλος Ἰησοῦ, a ſervant of Jeſus, and ſo the latter as proper a ſtyle of any Apoſtle of Chriſt as the former. But then ſecondly, in the title of the Epiſtle, which is the ſenſe of the antient Church in this matter, it is Ἰούδα τοῦ Ἀποστόλου, of Jude the Apoſtle, and in the Text it ſelf there is a mark as characteriſtical, ἀδελφὸς Ἰακώβου, the brother of James, which can belong to none but to Jude the Apoſtle. To the ſecond I anſwer (as before to that of the ſecond of Peter) that this Epiſtle was not ſo univerſally known and undoubtedly received at firſt as other parts of the New Teſtament; which notwithſtanding, it was yet ſoon after univerſally known, and tranſlated, and received into the antient Canon, and the Apoſtolicalneſs of the writing never ſo queſtioned by any as to aſſign it any other Author, or to doubt of the truth of any thing contained it it. As for Jude the fifteenth Biſhop of Jeruſalem, that opinion of his being the Author of it, affixeth it to the time of Adrian, whereas this Epiſtle, by the ſubject of it, common to it with the ſecond of Peter, and by the many paſſages of agreement, appears to have been written on the ſame occaſion, and about the ſame time that the ſecond of Peter was, which hath already appeared (ſee Note on 2 Pet. iii. a.) to have been written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. And if that were indeed granted to be written by Simeon the ſecond Biſhop of Jeruſalem, yet that would be a competent diſtance from Judas the fifteenth Biſhop there. The whole buſineſs of this Epiſtle, as of S. Peter, is ſuch as is fully applicable to the times foregoing the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the ruin of the Jews, and Judaizing Chriſtians, and Gnoſticks involved in the ſame calamity, out of which only the conſtant Chriſtians were to have deliverance, v. 3. And ſo it may very reaſonably be affirmed to be written by the Apoſtle S. Jude, clearly defined to be the brother of James (an argument of ſuch force againſt all the contrary pretenſions, that thoſe which doubt of the Apoſtolicalneſs of the Epiſtle, are fain to leave out thoſe words, but without the authority of any one Copy to countenance them) and that, as the Epiſtle of S. James, and thoſe of S. Peter, addreſſed to the Jewiſh Chriſtians in the diſperſion, on purpoſe to fortifie them againſt the corruptions of the Gnoſticks, which had now broke in among them.

Jude, one of the diſciples (and Apoſtles) of Chriſt, the ſon of Alphæus (as James alſo was) and called alſo Lebbæus and Thaddæus, Mat. 10. 3. to thoſe that have received the faith, the diſperſed Jewiſh Chriſtians (ſee Mat. 20. c.) ſanctified, or beloved by God the Father, and preſerved by Chriſt from that deſtruction and judgment that befalls others (the contumacious reſiſters and crucifiers) both here and to all eternity:

3. Beloved, I thought it my office to write briefly unto you upon one ſubject wherein you are nearly concerned, viz. that ſpecial promiſe of Chriſt (now ſhortly to be fulfilled among you) of an univerſal preſervation and deliverance (ſee Rom. 13. Note c.) that ſhall befall the Chriſtians, when the unbelieving Jews ſhall be utterly deſtroyed: And being to write to you on that ſubject, there was nothing more neceſſary for me to begin with, than to exhort you to adhere conſtantly to, and contend for the Chriſtian doctrine (preached uniformly to all by conſent of all the Apoſtles, whitherſoever they have gone out) and not to renounce it in time of perſecution, as ſome would teach you.

For as it hath been foretold by Chriſt, Mat. 24. b. 10. that it ſhould, ſo now it is come to paſs, there are come in very ſlily into the Church falſe teachers, who ſhall be deſtroyed by that notable coming of Chriſt, (ſee 2 Theſſ. 2. 8, &c.) and are for their ſins and vileneſs propheſied of, that they ſhall be ſo deſtroyed, abominable perſons, converting the Goſpel, or Chriſtianity, into all manner of unnatural luſt, and denying Jeſus Chriſt our only Maſter, our only God, our only Lord, and ſetting up Simon Magus inſtead of him (and of God the Father alſo.)

11. Woe to them; For three things they are notable for; firſt, Hatred, malice, and perſecuting of their fellow-Chriſtians, (where upon S. John in all his Epiſtles inculcates charity) even proceeding to murther it ſelf, as Cain did to his brother; ſecondly, the great villany that Balaam, to get a reward, inſnared the Iſraelites in, (ſee Rev. 2. 14.) and thirdly, the contempt and rebellion againſt ſuperiours, ſuch as was in Core againſt Moſes and Aaron, (ſee Note c.) and this will ſuddenly bring certain ruine upon them, as it did on thoſe other. f.

Annotations on S. JUDE.

a. οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα

V. 4. Before of old ordained to this condemnation] The way to interpret this, as almoſt any other difficulty in this Epiſtle, will be by comparing it with the ſecond of Peter, which is almoſt perfectly parallel to this. There theſe men are ſpoken of c. 2. 3. and the paſſage that there ſeems parallel to οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, is, ἐπάγοντες ἑαυτοῖς ταχινὴν ἀπώλειαν, v. 1. bringing on themſelves ſwift deſtruction, and, οἷς τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι οὐκ ἀργεῖ, καὶ ἡ ἀπώλεια αὐτῶν οὐ νυστάζει, for whom judgment for ſome while lingreth not, and their deſtruction doth not nod, ver. 3. which ſignifies in both places the certain and quick deſtruction that is likely to come upon thoſe men who, by complying with the Jews, and profeſſing themſelves to be ſuch, to avoid their perſecutions, are by the Roman deſtroyers taken for Jews, and ſo ſpeedily (ſoon after this time) devoured. Only in this place is mentioned the πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι, being formerly ſet forth, or written of, anſwerable to which is 2 Pet. 2. 1. ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσονται ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, among you ſhall be falſe teachers, which being an affirmation that there ſhall be, muſt be grounded on ſome prophecy or prediction that there ſhould. And that is clearly to be found in Chriſt's prediction of the deſtruction of the Jews, Mat. 24. 10 before which there ſhould come falſe prophets, all one with the falſe teachers in S. Peter (ſee 1 Joh. 2. 6.) by which the Gnoſticks are certainly to be underſtood; (ſee Note on Mat. 24. d.) And therefore at the writing of S. Jude's Epiſtle, theſe being actually come in, he ſpeaks not of them by way of prophecy that they ſhall come; but applies to them the former prophecy, that they are the men that were before written or propheſied of by Chriſt in the Goſpel of S. Matthew, and ſo capable of that title. In ſtead of this when S. John, 1 Joh. 2. 18. ſpeaks of this very matter, he ſaith, καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ὁ Ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται, καὶ νῦν πολλοὶ Ἀντίχριστοι γεγόνασι, as ye have heard that Antichriſt cometh, ſo now there are many Antichriſts, by which, ſaith he, we know that it is the laſt hour: juſt as S. Matthew had made it a prognoſtick of the coming of that παρουσία or fatal period of the Jews. By this it appears, firſt, that πάλαι formerly here refers to Chriſt's time, προγεγραμμένοι forewritten of, to Mat. 24. or the paſſage there ſet down, and τὸ κρῖμα judgment, or condemnation, to that great deſtruction that ſhould fall about that time upon all the obdurate unbelieving Jews, and falſe teachers, Gnoſticks, or other abominable Chriſtians, whoſe ſin is ſet down in the following words, ἀσεβεῖς, impious, &c. their judgment or condemnation in theſe. As for the word προγεγραμμένοι it ſelf, it ſignifies no more than to be ſet forth, or expoſed to publick view (as πρόγραμμα is any thing paſted up upon a door to ſignifie ought, ἔκθεμα in Phavorinus) and ſo we have it uſed, Gal. 3. 1. οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς προεγράφη, to whom Chriſt hath been ſet forth before their eyes; only by the πάλαι added to it, it is here made to ſignifie prophecy or prediction, ſomewhat formerly ſet forth, or declared of them. And that not only their ſin, their falſe doctrine, and ſlie coming in was foretold, but their puniſhment and deſtruction alſo (by this famous coming of Chriſt to the deſtruction of his crucifiers) appears 2 Theſſ. 2. 8, &c. where S. Paul foretelling it, moſt probably refers to ſome prediction of Chriſt to this matter. And ſuch is that of Mat. 16. 25. that they that will ſave their lives, ſhall loſe them, and only they that hold out and continue conſtant in their confeſſion of Chriſt, ſhall eſcape this ruin, Mat. 10. 22. and 24. 13. And ſo this is the full meaning of this phraſe, οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, men whoſe impoſtures firſt, and then their vengeance alſo have been foretold by Chriſt. Unleſs we ſhould farther add to this, that the judgments that formerly fell on the like wicked men, and the denuntiations of thoſe judgments by Enoch, &c. v. 14 ſhould here be referred to alſo, as emblematical and typical predictions of the puniſhment that is ſure to fall on theſe men, upon that principle of divine judgment, that they who are parallel in the ſins ſhall be alſo in the puniſhment.

Ib. Denying the only Lord God—] The various readings in this place, ſome having, but the King's MS. leaving out the word Θεὸν God, deſerve to be conſidered. If Θεὸν God be not read, then the whole period will belong to Jeſus Chriſt alone, without any mention of God the Father, and affirm of him, that he is our only Maſter and Lord, referring to his great work of our Redemption, by which he thus purchaſed us unto himſelf to be his peculiar ſervants, ſo as any other falſe Gods or Devils, ſo as Simon Magus, that now ſet up againſt him, muſt never have any part of our honour, or worſhip, or obedience from him. But if Θεὸν God be read, then it will be doubtful which of theſe two ſenſes is to be affixed to it. For 1. it may be thus rendred, Τὸν μόνον δεσπότην Θεὸν καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, Our only Maſter, God and Lord, Jeſus Chriſt, making thoſe three the ſeveral attributes of Jeſus Chriſt; viz. that he is, firſt, our only Maſter, ſecondly, our only God, and thirdly, our only Lord. And this, underſtood in the Catholick ſenſe of the antient Fathers and Councils, is a moſt divine truth, that Chriſt is our Maſter, by title of Redemption, and our only Maſter, not excluding God the Father and God the holy Ghoſt, (for as he and his Father are one, ſo he and the holy Ghoſt are one alſo) but all other pretenders, ſuch as Simon, that thus aſſumed himſelf to be that truly, which Chriſt, ſaid he, appeared to be here on earth; and ſo in like manner, in the ſame way of interpretation, that Chriſt is our only God, and only Lord. And this interpretation proceeds upon that way of punctation which is ordinarily retained in our Copies, no comma after Θεὸν God, but all read in one coherent ſenſe, τὸν μόνον δεσπότην Θεὸν καὶ Κύριον, our only Maſter God and Lord Jeſus Chriſt. A ſecond rendring may alſo poſſibly belong to it, in caſe there were, or ought to be, a comma after Θεὸν God. For then Θεὸν God, being ſeparated from that which follows, would denote God the Father, and conſequently τὸν μόνον δεσπότην, the only Maſter, muſt belong to him; which if it do, then it muſt be affirmed of theſe Gnoſtick-hereticks, the followers and worſhippers of Simon, that they did deny God the Father, our only maſter, as well as they denied our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And ſo indeed we read of him, that he aſſumed to be that God who appeared to Moſes in mount Sinai, and accordingly the ſtatue was erected to him at Rome: and that is the meaning of exalting himſelf above all that is called God, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. and of what Irenæus ſaith of him, that he affirmed himſelf to be ſublimiſſimam virtutem. hoc eſt, eum qui ſit ſuper omnia Pater, the ſublimeſt vertue, that is, him who is the Father above all things, and that the Jews God was one of his Angels, and a great deal more. See 2 Theſſ. 2. Note e.

b. δεσπότην Θεὸν καὶ κύριον —

V. 7. Eternal fire] The phraſe αἰώνιον πῦρ in all other places, Mat. 18. 8. and 24. 41, 48. ſignifying the fire wherein the damned are tormented day and night for ever and ever, Rev. 20. 10. it is yet thought probable that in this place, being applied to theſe cities of Sodom, &c. it ſhould be taken in another notion, for an utterly deſtroying fire, ſuch being the fire and brimſtone that fell on thoſe cities. But for this there appeareth no neceſſity; but on the other ſide there is a conjuncture of all circumſtances of the Context to perſuade the underſtanding it here of the fire of hell, as in all the other places. For firſt, it is evident that Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, ſignifie in this place the inhabitants of thoſe cities; for to thoſe only, and not to the walls and buildings of the cities, belongs the ἐκπορνεύσασαι, having given themſelves over to fornication. And then ſure thoſe that ſuffer the vengeance of eternal hell (and therein are ſet forth for an example what we Chriſtians, falling into the like courſes, are to expect) are not the walls but the inhabitants alſo. Now of theſe it is here affirmed in the Preſent-tenſe, πεῖσιν δεῖγμα, they that thus formerly ſinned, are ſet forth a pattern, or an example (as men which are puniſhed are) πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέχουσα, ſuffering, or undergoing, (at the preſent, when Jude writes it) the vengeance of eternal fire. Of the unbelieving Iſraelites he had affirmed v. 5. that God ἀπώλεσεν (in the Aoriſt) deſtroyed them: of the Angels, v. 6. that μὴ τηρήσαντας ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας, having not kept but forſaken their principality, τετήρηκεν in the Præter-tenſe, he hath kept them under darkneſs in everlaſting chains unto the judgment of the great day, and ſo of theſe cities in the Aoriſt, ἐκπορνεύσασαι, having given themſelves over to fornication, καὶ ἀπελθοῦσαι, and having gone——But now in the latter part of the verſe it is only in the Preſent-tenſe, they are propoſed or ſet forth a pattern, or an example, ὑπέχουσαι, in the Preſent, undergoing, or ſuffering, the vengeance of eternal fire; either not at all referring by thoſe words to their long ago paſt deſtruction by fire and brimſtone, which was notorious in ſacred ſtory, and ſo ſufficiently intimated in the very mention precedent of Sodom and Gomorrah; or if he did, yet withal conſidering it as a judgment ſtill continued, then begun as an eſſay ſignificative of what followed, but ſtill protracted without any releaſe, they ſtill ſuffer, or undergo, that vengeance of fire, which fire is withal αἰώνιον, never likely to have an end. And this is the exacteſt and propereſt notion of theſe words, which I therefore prefer before any other.

V. 8. Dignities] What the word δόξαι ſignifies in this place, and the paralled of S. Peter, 2 Pet. 2. 10. is a little uncertain. Though it be literally rendred Glories, in the Abſtract, yet there is no doubt but that it denotes the perſons (the ſubjects of that glory or greatneſs) in the Concrete, as ἐξουσίαι powers, Rom. 13. 1. ſignifies rulers, or men in power and authority; and κυριότης, 2 Pet. 2. 10. thoſe in whom dominion is veſted. But whether theſe be men or Angels, is not ſo clear. That they are Angels is made probable by theſe arguments; firſt, Becauſe the appearance of Angels in the Old Teſtament is ordinarily expreſſed by δόξα κυρίου the glory of the Lord, the appearances of them being viſible in bright ſhining clouds, as hath oft been ſaid. And ſo agreeably Angels in the Plural, or the order or hierarchy of Angels conſidered together, may be called Δόξαι Glories, that is, thoſe glorious creatures that attend and wait on God. Secondly, 'Tis obſervable Col. 2. 8. that the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Angels, uſeth the phraſe ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν, which he, that is, man, hath not ſeen, expreſſing the Angels by that periphraſis, thoſe that are inviſible ſpirits, never ſeen, nor conſequently particularly known by any man, creatures above us, out of our reach. And ſo in like manner this Apoſtle here ſpeaking more of theſe δόξαι glories, ver. 10. expreſſes them by ὅσα μὲν οὐκ οἴδασι, thoſe things which they know not, and 2 Pet. 2. 12. ἃ ἀγνοοῦσι, thoſe which they are ignorant of, which is an expreſſion directly parallel to that other uſed by S. Paul of Angels. Thirdly, Becauſe of other dominions their contempt had been ſet down before, both in S. Peter and here, by the phraſe ἀθετοῦσι and καταφρονοῦσι, ſetting at nought, making nothing of, and deſpiſing, ſcornfully behaving themſelves toward their ſuperiours, and ſo needed not be repeated again in theſe words. But yet on the other ſide it muſt be ſaid, that what was before ſaid of their ſetting dominion at nought, may refer to their doctrine of Chriſtian liberty, or their not being ſubject to any ruler or Maſter, which is noted in them, 1 Tim. 6. 1. and then this of their practice ſuperſtructed on that doctrine, their ſpeaking contumeliouſly of thoſe that exerciſe that dominion, may be fit enough to be added to the former, and ſo may be ſet down in that phraſe βλασφημοῦσι δόξας, they ſpeak evil of glories. And that it doth ſo ſignifie is moſt probable: Firſt, becauſe we find not in any Church-writers that the hereſie of the Gnoſticks had any thing in it of particular oppoſition or defiance to Angels, but on the contrary the Æones, noting the Angels, make up a great part of their Divinity. A ſecond argument may be taken from the mention of the gainſaying of Core, whereby this ſin of theſe Gnoſticks is exemplified ver. 11. where as ἀντιλογία contradicting, and βλασφημία evil ſpeaking, are of the ſame importance; ſo we know the ſin of Core conſiſted in the murmuring and rebelling againſt Moſes and Aaron, that were by God ſet over them. And for thus doing the Gnoſticks are (2 Tim. 3.) diſtinctly compared to Jannes and Jambres the Ægyptian Magicians (and ſuch was Simon and Menander, and the chief of theſe) who by their ſorceries reſiſted Moſes coming in God's name to the Iſraelites and to Pharoah, as theſe did the Apoſtles of Chriſt. And ſo this will be the meaning of the phraſe, ſpeaking ill of thoſe that are ſet over them, that is, contumelious uſage of the Apoſtles or Governours of the Church (who are called δόξα Χριστοῦ, the glory of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 8. 23.) with whom particularly they had many controverſies and diſputations (referred to ver. 9.) in which thoſe contumelious ſpeeches on the Gnoſticks part would be but effects of their great daring pride (mentioned 2 Pet. 2. 10. immediately before it) and of their diſcriminating themſelves from all others, v. 19. and ſo is very probable to have been obſervable and accuſable in them. See Note on the title of 2 John a.

δόξα Χριστοῦ

V. 9. Body of Moſes] What the body of Moſes here ſignifies, will eaſily be diſcerned by comparing it with the place from whence this controverſie of the Angel with the Devil is here cited, and that is undoubtedly Zach. 3. 1. There we have Joſhua the High-prieſt ſtanding before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan ſtanding at his right hand to reſiſt him, or diſpute or plead againſt him, as the ſtanding at the right hand notes an accuſer, impleading another; (Let Satan ſtand at his right hand, Pſal. 109.) And the only words which are there mentioned from the Angel (under the name of the Lord) to Satan are theſe here ſet down, The Lord rebuke thee. Now the matter of controverſie then between the Angel and the Devil, the good and bad Angel, was (that which is the ſubject of that preſent Viſion) the re-edifying of the Temple, and reſtoring of the ſervice of God amongſt the Jews at Jeruſalem. This is called the body of the Jews, 2 Mac. 15. 12. where we have Oniar praying for the whole body of the Jews: and may as firly be ſtyled the body of Moſes, in the ſame manner as the Chriſtian Church, or aſſembling of Chriſtians for the ſervice of Chriſt, is called the body of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 12. 20, 25, 27. Eph. 1. 23. and 4. 12, 16. Col. 1. 18. Jam. 3. 2. The Judaical Temple and worſhip and ſervice depending upon Moſes, as the Lawgiver, or principle, or head under God, from whence it came; as Chriſt's being the Lawgiver of the Chriſtian Church, and inſtituting Apoſtles, &c. in it, is the reaſon why he is called the head of that, and the Church the body of Chriſt, as on the other ſide, we know he calls his body a Temple, Deſtroy this Temple, &c. and the Apoſtle of us, that our bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghoſt. Agreeable hereunto it is, that all Chriſtians, as they live together in publick communion, congregating together in aſſemblies, are called (in reference to this notion of body) members and fellow-members, and the reſtoring the congregations or ἐπισυναγωγαὶ αὐτῶν is called καταστάσεις, (ſee Note on 2 Cor. 13. c. and Epeſ. 4. 12.) And ſo in Ignatius's Epiſtle to the Church of Smyrna, he talks of congratulating with the Church of Syria, becauſe they are in peace, and ἀποκατεστάθη αὐτοῖς τὸ ἴδιον σωμάτειον, their body is reſtored to them; where their reſtitution to the free publick ſervice of God (ſuch as here Joſhua and Zerubbabel were foretold to labour for, and Satan to labour againſt, and the Archangel to contend with him about it) is expreſſed by the reſtoring of their own body. One difficulty here ſtill remaineth, how this example is proper to the point in hand, ſpeaking evil of glories, or dignities, or dominions. And that which ſeems moſt reaſonable is, that the Devil here is the ſame that in other places is called Belzebub the Prince of Devils, the Prince of the air, and Prince of darkneſs, and Rev. 9. 11. in the antient MS. in the King's Library, ὁ ἄρχων τῆς ἀβύσσου, ὁ ἄγγελος, the Angel, the Prince of the Abyſs, or Pit, who having been once a principal Angel in heaven, having loſt that dignity, is now the Prince of hell, and otherwhere is noted by Principality or Power, he that hath power over the other devils. Now if Michael the Archangel in a quarrel with him, about a matter of ſuch weight as was the reſtitution of the ſervice of God among the Jews, would not uſe any bitterneſs or execration againſt him, then how unreaſonable is it for theſe Gnoſticks, how without all excuſe, thus to demean themſelves toward the Apoſtles of Chriſt? That the Devil is here look'd on in this notion, may be concluded by comparing it with 2 Pet. 2. 11. (which ſure is parallel to this) where ſpeaking evil of them muſt needs refer to the δόξαι glories or dignities, v. 10. And therefore if the Devil be comprehended there under that phraſe, (as here he is diſtinctly named) it muſt follow that he is here look'd on as a δόξα or dignity, that is, as a Prince, though it be of devils.

V. 11. The error of Balaam] This expreſſion of S. Jude, τῇ πλάνῃ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν, hath much of difficulty in it. What is meant by πλάνη error may appear by Rom. 1. 27. where it is clearly ſet to ſignifie their ſeduction to Idolatry, of which the Gnoſticks were guilty, and whereby they fell into all thoſe unnatural ſins, ἄρσενες ἐν ἄρσεσι, contrary to the φυσικὴ χρῆσις ἢ θηλείας, in the beginning of that verſe. Thus is the word πλάνη uſed 1 Theſſ. 2. 3. not only for ſeduction in general, but particularly that of the Gnoſticks, being there joined with ἀκαθαρσία, uncleanneſs; and ſo perhaps Eph. 4. 14. where the cunning of the falſe teachers is ſaid to be uſed εἰς μεθοδίαν πλάνης, for the contriving, or deſigning of deceit, or ſeduction, that is, for the infuſing this great corruption of the Gnoſticks, all manner of luſt and filthineſs: ſo it is clearly taken, 2 Pet. 2. 18. where πλάνη is interpreted by the ἐπιθυμία σαρκὸς and ἀσελγείαις, luſts of the fleſh, and filthineſſes, preceding in that verſe; and as clearly 2 Pet. 3. 17. τῇ ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες, led away with the deceit of unruly men, referring to the ſeduction and abominable doctrines of the filthy Gnoſticks. For that this was the πλάνη τοῦ Βαλαὰμ, the ſeduction into which Balaam brought the Iſraelites by his counſel to Balak (when, as the Hieruſalem Targum reads, Numbers 25. 14. he adviſed Balak in theſe words, Veni nunc, conſulam tibi quid populo huic facies: Fac eos peccare, Come now, I will counſel thee what thou ſhalt do to this people: Make them ſin) appears by Num. 25. 1. but eſpecially by 2 Pet. 2. 15. and Rev. 2. 14. where this πλάνη is called in one ἡ ὁδὸς, in the other, ἡ διδαχὴ Βαλαὰμ, the way, and the doctrine of Balaam. Now for ἐξεχύθησαν, ſome probability there is by comparing it with that place of Rom. 1. 27. (which hath much agreement with this paſſage) that it ſhould be a miſtake in the Copy for ἐξεκαύθησαν. burning, there, and denote burning in luſt. And thus 'tis clear the Syriack read it, who render it אשתרתו exarſerunt, or, as the new Paris Edition renders it, libidinosè exarſerunt, they burnt libidinouſly: but the word as it is, is capable of a very commodious interpretation, ſo as to agree with the notion given of ἀναχυσις, 1 Pet. 4. 4. for thoſe unnatural ſins of uncleanneſs and confuſion of ſexes. Thus when the Gloſs of Phavorinus (as the printed Copies have it) renders ἐξεχύθησαν by nothing but ἠφανίσθησαν were deſtroyed, and Heſychius by ἐφανίσθησαν (which muſt needs be falſe printed) that may very probably be a miſtake of the Copy for ἐπλανήθησαν, uſed inſtead of this word in the parallel place 2 Pet 2. 15. (So Pſal. 13. 2. πας ἐξέκλινον ἐξεχύθη almoſt gone out of the way) noting here thoſe great declinations and deviations from the right way, theſe tranſgreſſions of the Law of Nature. And ſo ἐξεχύθησαν will ſignifie the breaking or running out (as a veſſel, Luk. 5. 37.) into all confuſion of luſts and baſe practices, ſuch as wherein the Gnoſticks tranſcended and exceeded all the men in the world. Laſtly, the word μισθῷ hath difficulty and doubt in it, whether being uſed Adverbially it be to be rendred ἀντὶ μισθοῦ, by way of reward, or elſe ἕνεκα μισθοῦ, for reward's ſake. The parallel place, 2 Pet. 2. 15. inclines to the latter of theſe: for there on the mention of Balaam 'tis added, ὃς μισθὸν ἀδικίας ἠγάπησεν, who loved the reward of unrighteouſneſs, noting that what he did by his counſel for the bringing the Iſraelites to theſe ſins, he did out of covetouſneſs, or μισθοῦ ἕνεκα, to get reward from Balak. But the other place (which may paſs for a parallel alſo) Rom. 1. 27. perſuade the former: for there all their obduration of heart, viz. God's delivering them up to the παθη ἀτιμίας, reprobate mind, in doing τὰ οὐ καθήκοντα, going on ſenſelelly in all their abominable ſins, is ſaid to be ἀντιμισθία πλάνης, a retribution, or reward, or puniſhment, proportioned to their Idolatrous practices, and ſo here it will be true of the ſeduction of Balaam, or that Balaamitical filthineſs, that the Gnoſticks were permitted to fall, or by God were delivered up to it without any reſiſtance, as a puniſhment to befall them in deſerting Chriſtianity into licentiouſneſs. And this ſeems to be the moſt probable rendring of the place, thus, that they fell into thoſe filthy libidinous burnings, or confuſions of luſts, the ſame that Balaam ſeduced the Iſraelites into, and this by way of reward, or juſt puniſhment from God, who thus puniſhed them with deſertion, and tradition unto this ſtupid ſenſeleſs continuing and multiplying of theſe ſins. Thus when the Syriack renders it, ובחר טעיותה רבלעם באגרא אשתרתו, the Latin interpreter reads verbatim, Et poſt errorem Balaam in mercede exarſerunt, and the Latin Paris Edition in mercedem, both joining the μισθῷ to the ἐξεκαύθησαν, that they by way of reward, or for their puniſhment and reward, did thus fall into theſe libidinous burnings, not referring to that of Balaam's doing what he did in contemplation of reward.

V. 12. Trees whoſe fruit withereth] Φθινόπωρον is a ſeaſon of the year; τεσσὶ μὲν τὸ θέρος, ſaith Phavorinus, the ſeaſon after the Summer, and again, ὁ δὲ ἀπὸ τ πέμπτε καὶ δεκάτης Αὐγούστου μηνὸς, the ſeaſon beginning from the fifteenth, or, ſay others, the 22. of Auguſt, continued to the ſame day of December. Thus is the year divided in Sextus Empiricus adv. Mathem. l. 5. c. 1. Ἐν Κεῷ ἐαρινὴ γίνεται τεσσὶ, ἐν Αἰγοκέρῳ δὲ χειμερινὴ, ἐν Καρκίνῳ δὲ θερινὴ, καὶ ἐν Ζυγῷ φθινοπωρινὴ, making this to Winter, as the Spring is to Summer. And Olympiodorus in Meteor. p. 20. θέρος εἰς β' διαιρεῖται· εἰς θέρος, ὅταν ἥλιος ᾖ ἐν Καρκίνῳ καὶ Παρθένῳ, καὶ εἰς ὀπώραν, ἵνικα ᾖ ἐν ἡλίῳ ἐν Λέοντι ὅταν ὁ Σείριος φαίνηται· ἡ δὲ ἐξῆς ὥρα φθινόπωρον καλεῖται, ὡς ἂν μὴ τ φθίσιν ἡμοιώθη. By which it appears that φθινόπωρον begins after both parts of Summer are ended, θέρος and ὀπώρα after the dog-ſtar hath done ſhining, when it draweth toward Winter, and the ſeaſon, though it begins in Auguſt on the 15. or 22. yet reacheth out to Chriſtmas, that is, to the ſharpeſt and depth of Winter, and is ſo called, becauſe it begins from the end of the ſeaſon of ripe fruit, that is, φθινούσης ὀπώρας. In this ſenſe of the Subſtantive, φθινοπωρινὸς, the derivative Adjective, muſt ſignifie that which belongs to that time: and ſo the Arabick Interpreter in the New Paris Edition of the Bible reads חרופיה autumnales, and ſo S. Hierom alſo; and ſo φθινοπωρινὰ δένδρα will be trees in that condition in which they uſe to be at that time of year, that is, bare, having loſt their leaves, and having nothing deſirable on them (like the waterleſs empty clouds precedent.) So in * Cinnamus, after φθινούσης ἤδη τ ὥρας, which is the diſſolving of the word φθινόπωρον, and deſcription of this ſeaſon, by the decaying of the beauty of trees, &c. it preſently follows ὅτε τὸ ἀμφιλαφὲς σκιερὸν ἤδη τοῖς δένδρεσι, the leaves or ſhade, (Ἀμφίλαφες, κάλλιστον, ſaith Heſychius) had now left the trees; and this a direct emblem of the Gnoſticks, and quite contrary to the godly man, deſcribed Pſal. 1. 3, 4. whoſe leaf doth not wither: and then to theſe is fitly added ἄκαρπα fruitleſs, trees that have neither the verdure of leaves, nor profit of fruit on them, trees which, beſide that they bear no fruit, are deprived and naked, and bare of leaves alſo, and ſuch are thoſe that are come to the denying of Chriſtian profeſſion it ſelf, as we know the Gnoſticks did. Another ſignification ſeems to be followed by the Syriack, who read ראשה אבמון quarum fructus emarcuit, or defecit, whoſe fruit hath withered, or failed, according to a notion of φθινόπωρον for ἡ νόσος, a diſeaſe, in Phavorinus, that diſeaſe probably ſuch as befals fruit and trees, φθίνουσα ἐπιφορὰ, a blaſt or ſut, perhaps ἰὸς σίτου æruga, that ſpoils fruit and corn; for, ſaith Phavorinus and Heſychius, φθίνα, ἡ ἰὸς σίτου, and then δένδρα φθινοπωρινὰ will be blaſted trees: and this will alſo do well to ſignifie theſe rotten putrid Gnoſticks, a blaſted ſort of Chriſtians, withal ἄκαρπα, without any kind of fruit on them. But the former of theſe is moſt agreable to the nature of the word, and ſo fitteſt to be adhered to.

h. ἦλθε Κύριος ἐν μυριάσιν ἁγίαις μετ' ἀγγέλων

ſuch as are mentioned Heb. 12. 22. μυριάσι ἀγγέλων, myriads of Angels, or, as the Targum on Deut. 33. 2. Myriades angelorum ſanctorum, where we read only ſaints, from the Hebrew which reads of holy ones, that is, Angels, but I ſay) his holy myriads, or hoſts, of Angels, with ten thouſands in each, which makes his coming ſo ſolemn and ſo formidable a thing. And thus in the prophecy of Zachary, chap. 14. 5. where we read, The Lord my God ſhall come, and all the ſaints with thee, it is to be read from the Hebrew, with all his holy ones, that is, with his guard of Angels, and that (it ſeemeth) here, ποιῆσαι κρίσιν, to execute judgment, and rebuke, &c. That Enoch thus prophecied in his time of theſe Gnoſticks under Chriſt, we are not told; but that he prophecied to them, that is, that his prophecy concerning the exciſion of the old world, for ſuch ſins as theſe are now guilty of, is very pertinent to them, and fit to be conſidered by them. Thus we ſee S. Peter Ep. 2. ch. 2. applies to them all the judgments that had ever befallen ſinners, particularly that in Noah's time, of which that Enoch prophecied, there is no queſtion, and we have theſe remains of it. Firſt, the name of his ſon Methuſela. שלח Sela in Hebrew ſignifies miſſion, ſending, or powring out waters on the earth, Job. 5. 10. שלח מים, he ſends out waters on the fields; to which, ſaith Bochart, Arphaxad related when he called his firſt-born Sela, in memory of the Deluge, two years after which Arphaxad was born, Gen. 11. 6. And ſo in like manner Enoch, that prophecied of this deſtruction, and foreſaw by the Spirit, that it would ſoon follow the death of this his ſon, he called his name מתו שלח, his death, emiſſion. To this it is conſiderable, what we find in * Stephanus Byzant. in the word Ἰκόνιον, where mentioning Enoch, or Hannoch, he ſaith of him, that he lived 300 years and above, and that the inhabitants asked the Oracle how long he ſhould live, ἐκόθη ὁ χρησμὸς ὅτι τότε τῆδε πάντες διαφθαρήσονται, and the Oracle anſwered, than when he was dead all men ſhould be deſtroyed (or, as the word will bear, corrupted, in that ſenſe in which we find Gen. 6. 2. ſoon after Enoch's death, the earth was corrupt before God, which how it belongs to filthy luſts, hath oft been ſhewed) which he applies to Deucalion's flood, and the univerſal deſtruction there, and adds, that the news of this Oracle was ſo ſadly received by the inhabitants, that ἐπὶ Ἀνναχῷ (perhaps it ſhould be Ἄνναχος, for ſo he hath it before in the Genitive caſe) κλαύσειν, to wail for Enoch, is proverbially uſed, ἐπὶ τῶν λίαν οἰκτιζομένων, for thoſe that mourn exceſſively. Here 'tis poſſible that the confounding the two ſtories of Enoch and Methuſelah made up this relation: For as to the latter part, of the flood following his death, that may beſt belong to the ſon Methuſelah, whoſe name was thus prophetical; but for the years of his life, thoſe ſeem to belong to Enoch, for he lived 365 years. Suidas, lightly miſtaking his name, calls him Nannac, who, ſaith he, is reported to be a King before the flood, and foreſeeing the approach thereof, he aſſembled all men to the Temple, and with tears ἱκέτευσε prayed to avert it: and Eraſmus out of Hermogenes makes the ſame relation, and cites the Proverb, * τὰ Καννάκη κλαύσω, out of Herodes the Iambick writer, rendring it Cannacæ more plorem, as if it referred to his tears for averting the Deluge, when it more probably refers to the peoples lamenting, forecited from Stephanus. See Eupolemus in Euſebius Præpar. l. 9. who ſpeaking of Methuſelah, Enoch's ſon, ſaith, that he knew all by the Angels of God, and (Enoch being all one with Atlas) by theſe all Aſtrology came to the Greeks.

i. λαλεῖν ὑπέροχα

V. 16. Great ſwelling words] What is meant by the λαλεῖν ὑπέροχα here, may beſt be gueſt by comparing it with Dan. 11. 36. where we have the ſame phraſe, λαλήσει ὑπέροχα: there the Context will ſufficiently interpret it: The King ſhall do according to his will, and he ſhall exalt himſelf, and magnifie himſelf above every God, and ſhall ſpeak (marvellous, we render) high ſwoln things againſt the God of Gods. There doing according to his will, is caſting off all fear or care of laws or juſtice; his exalting and magnifying himſelf above every God, is his Atheiſtical deſpiſing of all religion, whether the true or the falſe, the Jewiſh or Heathen worſhip; and his ſpeaking the high ſwoln things againſt the God of Gods, is undervaluing the God of Iſrael, the only true God, and ſetting up ſome body elſe, as ſuperiour to him, the ſame that is ſaid of the Gnoſtick hereſie, and their leader Simon, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. that he oppoſeth, and exalteth himſelf over, or againſt, all that is called God, or worſhip. The ſame phraſe is again uſed, Dan. 7. 8. στόμα ὑπέροχα λαλοῦν a mouth ſpeaking great, or ſwelling, or lofty things. To one or both theſe paſſages of Daniel this place of Saint Jude ſeems to relate, joining theſe two together, walking after their own luſts, and their mouth ſpeaketh ὑπέροχα, high ſwoln words, as Dan. 11. doing according to his will, and ſpeaking high ſwoln words, &c. And therefore we have here reaſon to take it in the ſame ſenſe that there it appeareth to be uſed in; and though here be not mention of the God of Gods, againſt whom theſe ſtout things are ſpoken, yet to ſupply it from thence; and ſo it will agree moſt perfectly to the character of the Gnoſticks, 2 Theſſ. 2. 4. who certainly are the perſons here deſcribed. For of them it is evident (ſee 2 Theſſ. 2. Note e.) that they attributed Divinity unto Simon, made him the uppermoſt God, and the God of Iſrael but a part of his creation, worſhipp'd him and Helena his whore with ſacrifices, &c. and ſo did the very thing that there is ſaid of the King in Daniel, And whereas S. Peter in ſetting this down 2 Pet. 2. 18. adds unto it ματαιότητος of vanity, that may fitly be accorded with this in the notion of vanity for Idolatry, (ſee Rom. 8. Note h.) for ſuch was their worſhip of Simon. See Note b.

Ib. Senſual] Ψυχικὸς ſignifies here thoſe that have no taſte of any higher principle in them but of the ſenſitive ſoul, that ſuffer thoſe affections to carry them away, to rule and have dominion over them. Contrary to theſe are the πνευματικοὶ ſpiritual, they that move by an higher principle, that having the aſſiſtance of God's Spirit, and divine revelation, do act and move accordingly. From hence it is that Hereticks, that pretend to greater purity than other men, and ſo ſeparate from all others alſo, have generally deſired to diſcriminate themſelves from all others by calling themſelves πνευματικοὶ, the ſpiritual, and all others ψυχικοὶ, animales. And ſo particularly did the Gnoſticks and their followers in Irenæus; they forſooth were the ſpiritual, φύσει πνευματικοὶ naturally ſpiritual, and had no need of any of thoſe graces and gracious actions which were required to other men, and by their ἀπολύτρωσις, a kind of Baptiſm they had, became inviſible to the Judge, and all the ſins they could commit, could no more pollute them than the Sunbeams could be defiled by ſhining on a dunghil, or Gold by being in a kennel, the very character (a little improved) of theſe here, v. 18. walking after their godleſs luſts.

k. ψυχικοὶ

πνευματικοὶ

V. 20. Praying in the holy Ghoſt] It is ſufficiently known that the Apoſtles, and thoſe that were by the holy Ghoſt ſet apart for the planting of the Church, had many miraculous gifts, eſpecially χαρίσματα or graces; not every one all, but one one, another another. Among theſe, ſaith S. Chryſoſtom, there was in theſe firſt times, χάρισμα εὐχῆς, the gift of prayer, as alſo the gift of healing, of ſinging, propheſying, &c. 1 Cor. 14. 26. (ſee Note on Epheſ. 6. g.) This, ſaith he, was beſtowed εἰς ἕνα τινὰ, upon ſome one, who did pray for the reſt, and ask thoſe things which were uſeful for them, and teach others how to form prayers. Some of theſe ſpecial prayers thus conceived, and frequently uſed by them, which were fit for the common perpetual uſe of all Chriſtians, were received and kept by thoſe whom they thus taught, and are they which the antients mean by the Lyturgies of S. James, &c. which, or ſome other in that diſguiſe (or rather thoſe with ſome other later mixtures) are ſtill uſed by the Greek Church on ſolemn days. Theſe extraordinary χαρίσματα, as long as they laſted, are here called (as other ſpecial gifts of the Spirit alſo are) πνεῦμα ἅγιον

the holy Ghoſt, and πνεῦμα Spirit, Epheſ. 6. 18. the immediate moderatour, as it were, of all the petitions of the Church at that time. But when thoſe extraordinary χαρίσματα ceaſed, it is clear there was need of ſomewhat elſe to ſupply that place, and that would not be (in any reaſon) to let every man pray as he would (for, for the preventing of that, and the ill conſequents of it, it was that the χάρισμα ἐυχῆς gift of prayer had before been given) but ſet prepared forms, for the daily conſtant uſes, and thoſe provided by the Governours of the Church, Apoſtolical men, which had benefited under the prayers of thoſe that had the χάρισμα or gift, and remembred ſome forms of theirs, at leaſt the method and manner uſed by them. And this is the original of Liturgy among Chriſtians.

m. διακεινόμενοι

V. 22. Making a difference] What διακείνειν in the Middle voice ſignifies, hath been ſaid, Note on Jam. 2. c. and Note on c. 3. f. viz. to waver or doubt. And accordingly if it be here rendred (as in reaſon it muſt, and by Analogy with the uſe of the word in other places) it will be neceſſary to adhere to the reading of the King's MS. (which the vulgar Latin alſo appears to have followed, and the Nominative διακεινόμενοι will have no ſenſe) οὓς μὲν διακεινομένους, Some indeed, viz. thoſe that waver, though they are not yet faln off, either ἐλεᾶτε have pity on them, and out of compaſſion to ſuch weaklings do all that may tend to the ſettling or confirming them, or elſe (as the King's MS. reads) ἐλέγχετε, reprove them, after the manner of fraternal correption and admonition, by that means timely to reduce them to perſeverance and conſtancy, before yet they fall off and make ſhipwreck of the faith; whereas others that are already faln muſt be more nimbly handled, even ſnatch'd out of the fire, &c.

A PREMONITION Concerning the INTERPRETATION OF THE APOCALYPSE.

HAVING gone through all the other parts of the New Teſtament, I came to this laſt of the Apocalypſe, as to a rock that many had miſcarried and ſplit upon, with a full reſolution not to venture on the expounding of one word in it, but only to perform one office to it, common to the reſt, the review of the Tranſlation: But it pleaſed God otherwiſe to diſpoſe of it; for before I had read (with that deſign of tranſlating only) to the end of the firſt verſe of the Book, theſe words, ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν τάχει which muſt come to paſs preſently, had ſuch an impreſſion on my mind, offering themſelves as a key to the whole prophecy, (in like manner as, this generation ſhall not paſs till all theſe things be fulfilled, Mat. 24. 34. have demonſtrated infallibly to what coming of Chriſt that whole Chapter did belong) that I could not reſiſt the force of them, but attempted preſently a general ſurvey of the whole Book, to ſee whether thoſe words might not probably be extended to all the prophecies of it, and have a literal truth in them, viz. that the things foretold and repreſented in the enſuing viſions were preſently, ſpeedily, to come to paſs, one after another, after the writing of them. But before I could prudently paſs this judgment, which was to be found in underſtanding the ſubject-matter of all the Viſions, ſome other evidences I met with, concurring with this, and giving me abundant grounds of confidence of this one thing, that although I ſhould not be able to underſtand one period of all theſe Viſions, yet I muſt be obliged to think that they belonged to thoſe times that were then immediately enſuing, and that they had accordingly their completion, and conſequently that they that pretended to find in thoſe Viſions the predictions of events in theſe latter ages, and thoſe ſo nicely defined as to belong to particular acts and * perſons in this and ſome other kingdoms (a far narrower circuit alſo than that which reaſonably was to be aſſigned to that one Chriſtian prophecy for the Univerſal Church of Chriſt) had much miſtaken the drift of it.

* Thomas Cromwell and Cranmer, c. 14. 18. Qu. Elizabeth, Chemnitius, Lord Treaſurer Cecill, the three firſt Angels, c. 16. 1, 3, 4. Brightman Apoc. Apoc.

The arguments that induced this concluſion were theſe; Firſt, that this was again immediately inculcated, v. 3. ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς ἐγγύς, for the time is nigh, and that rendred as a proof that theſe ſeven Churches, to whom the prophecy was written, were concerned to obſerve and conſider the contents of it, Bleſſed is he that reads, and he that hears, &c. (ἐμπεφυκὸς ἀκοῇ, ſaith Arethas, that ſo hears as to practiſe) for the time, or ſeaſon, the point of time is near at hand. Secondly, that as here in the front, ſo c. 22. 6. at the cloſe, or ſhutting up of all theſe Viſions, and of S. John's Epiſtle to the ſeven Churches, which contained them, 'tis there again added, that God hath ſent his Angel to ſhew to his ſervants, ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν τάχει, the things that muſt be ſpeedily, or ſuddenly; and immediately upon the back of that are ſet the words of Chriſt, the Author of this prophecy, ἰδοὺ ἔρχομαι ταχύ, Behold I come quickly, not in the notion of his final coming to judgment (which hath been the cauſe of a great deal of miſtake, ſee Note on Mat. 24. b.) but of his coming to deſtroy his enemies, the Jews, &c. and then, Bleſſed is he that obſerves, or keeps, the prophecies of this book, parallel to what had been ſaid at the beginning, c. 1. 3. Thirdly, that v. 10. the command is given to John, not to ſeal the prophecies of the book, which that it ſignifies that they were of preſent uſe to thoſe times, and therefore to be kept open, and not to be laid up as things that poſterity was only or principally concern'd in, appears by that reaſon rendred of it, ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς ἐγγύς ἐστι, becauſe the time is nigh, the ſame which had here at the beginning been given, as the reaſon that he that conſidered the prophecies was bleſſed in ſo doing.

This being thus far deduced out of ſuch plain words, ſo many times repeated, the next thing that offered it ſelf to me was, to examine and ſearch what was the deſign of Chriſt's ſending theſe Viſions in a letter to the ſeven Churches. For by that ſomewhat might generally be collected of the matter of them. What that deſign was, appeared ſoon very viſibly alſo from plain words, which had no figure in them, viz. that they and all Chriſtians of thoſe times, being by the terrors of the then preſſing perſecutions from the Jews, and by the ſubtle inſinuations of the Gnoſticks (who taught it lawful to diſclaim and forſwear Chriſt in time of perſecution) in danger to loſe their conſtancy, might be fortified by what they here find of the ſpeedineſs of God's revenge on his enemies, and deliverance of believers that continued conſtant to him. This is the full importance of c. 1. 3. and the ſame again c. 22. 7. Bleſſed are they that keep, &c. for the time is nigh. So in the proeme, or ſalutation, by John prefix'd to this Epiſtle of Chriſt (which from v. 4. to v. 9. was the reſult of his obſervations upon the Viſions, and was not any part of the Viſions themſelves, and ſo gives us his notion and interpretation of this matter) we have theſe words, v. 7. Behold he cometh with clouds, &c. Where the coming of Chriſt being a known and ſolemn phraſe to ſignifie remarkable judgments or vengeance on ſinners (and in the firſt place on the Jews that crucified him) and deliverance for perſevering believers, (ſee Note on Mat. 24. b.) and the addition of the mention of clouds referring to God's preſence by Angels, the miniſters of his power, whether in puniſhing or protecting, this ἔρχεται, or coming, in the Preſent, agrees perfectly and literally with what was before obſerved of the ſpeedineſs of its approach at that time, and is an expreſs ſignification what was the deſign of ſending the Viſions to the Churches, viz. to fortifie them by that conſideration.

Proceeding therefore by theſe degrees, it preſently appeared by demonſtrable evidences, that the firſt part of that which was thus ſuddenly to come to paſs, was the illuſtrious deſtruction of the Jews (which was alſo, of all things imaginable, the ſureſt and opportuneſt comfort and fortification to the Chriſtians at that time, who were virulently virulently perſecuted by them, and indeed, as Tertullian ſaith, owed the beginning of all their perſecutions to the Jews.) This appeared firſt, by the latter part of the ſeventh verſe of the firſt Chapter, where the οἵτινες αὐτὸν κε-κέντηκε, as many as pierced Chriſt, and πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τ γῆς all the tribes of the land, moſt clearly denote the Jews (as ἡ γῆ the earth or the land hath been often ſhewed to ſignifie, and הארץ the land among the Jewiſh writers, ſee Note on Mat. 24. b.) whoſe wailing (there mentioned in the very words that are uſed, Mat. 24. 31.) was to be for the miſeries that came upon them, James 5. 1. For although ſome few words in this ſeventh verſe (as the looking on him whom they had pierced) would ſeem to make that ſeventh verſe parallel to that of Zach. 12. 10. and ſo, that it ſhould belong to the contrition or repentance of the Jews for the crucifying of Chriſt, as that ſeems to do (and if it do, may have had its completion at ſeveral times in many thouſands of that nation, (ſee Act. 21. 20.) about three thouſand being converted in one day, Act. 2. 39. and 41.) yet the whole frame of the words of this ſeventh verſe together, Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, and all that had pierced him, and all the tribes of the land ſhall mourn over, or upon, him, doth much more fully agree with the like words, Mat. 24. 30. where in the deſtruction (or the coming of the Son of man to this deſtruction) of the Jews we have theſe words, And then ſhall all the tribes of the land mourn, and ſhall ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, which clearly belongs to the deſtruction of the Jews. To which I ſhall only add, that becauſe that royal coming of Chriſt conſiſted of two parts, to deſtroy the impenitent Jews remarkably, and as remarkably to reſcue or ſave the penitent believers (and therefore in that place of Matthew it follows, v. 31. and his Angels ſhall gather the elect, &c. which belongs to that delivering of the penitent Chriſtian Jews) therefore that alſo of the Jews repenting for the crucifixion of Chriſt (that is, of thoſe Jews that at any time did repent) may here be taken in, in the richneſs of this divine writing; and ſo the ordinary ſenſe of the word in Zachary alſo will not be left out by this interpretation, which applies this verſe to the deſtruction of the Jews. So c. 6, 9, 10, 11. the ſouls beneath the altar, that cry for vengeance of all the blood that was ſhed in the land, is juſt parallel to that of Mat. 23. 35. that on the Jews of that generation ſhould come all the αἷμα ἐπὶ γῆς, the blood that had been ſhed on the land, &c. And accordingly all the reſt of that ſixth chap. of the great earthquake, the ſun become black, and moon as blood, and the ſtars falling from heaven, &c. are the very particulars mention'd in the immediate ſubſequent diſcourſe of Chriſt, Mat. 24. So moſt eſpecially c. 11. 8. that the ſcene of theſe tragedies is the city where our Lord was crucified, that is, certainly and literally Jeruſalem, called Sodom there, but that only πνευματικῶς myſtically, or ſpiritually (or in the viſion) as the text ſpecifies. So ſaith * S. Jerom, Hieruſalem ex eo tempore non appellatur civitas ſancta, ſed ſanctitatem & priſtinum nomen amittens, ſpiritualiter vocatur Sodoma & Ægyptus, Jeruſalem is called Sodom and Ægypt, referring to that place of Apoc. c. 11. which muſt therefore in his opinion be underſtood of Jeruſalem. And ſo that Comment, which Biſhop Tunſtall ſet out for S. Ambroſe's, interprets the ſixth chap. to be meant of the Jews. And in Arethes on c. 6. 12. concerning the earthquake, we find theſe words, τινὲς ταῦτα εἰς τ ὑπὸ τῶ ἀσπασιανῶ πολιορκίαν ἤλασον, τὰ εἰρημένα τροπολογήσαντες, ſome expound this tropologically of Veſpeſian's ſiege, where the thing of which he makes doubt in, that interpretation is the τροπολογία the figurativeneſs of the ſpeech; (whereas perhaps it may be underſtood of real earthquakes; ſee Note on c. 6. f.) but he objects not againſt the interpretation or application of it to thoſe times of Veſpaſian and the Jews. So Rupertus Tuitienſis interprets that chapter of the Jews: and I ſhall not need make uſe of the ſuffrages and conſent of many more, who have been forced to acknowledge that truth. But I muſt ſuppoſe that it will be objected and pretended, that this deſtruction of Jeruſalem was paſt at the time of John's receiving and writing this Viſion, becauſe 'tis affirmed by Euſebius, out of Irenæus, that 'twas received or ſeen (* ἑωράθη it was ſeen) πρὸς τῷ τέλει δομετιανῶ ἀρχῆς, at the end of Domitian's reign. To this I might reply from the opinion of † S. Auguſtine, and ſome others, that theſe Viſions were not all predictions of what was future, but the deſcription of what had paſſed from the firſt coming of Chriſt; and from venerable * Bede, that John recapitulates from the ſuffering of Chriſt; and † Rupertus Tuitienſis, that the Apocalypſe comprehends what had been, what is, and what ſhould be the ſtate of the Church; and this to very good purpoſe, by what was paſt to confirm Chriſtians in what was future, and now farther to be declared. And 'twould be no great objection againſt this, that 'tis all ſet down as a prophecy, for 'tis no new thing for prophecies ſometimes to ſpeak in the future tenſe of things that are paſt; as Dan. 7. 17. Theſe great beaſts, which are four, are four kings, which ſhall ariſe out of the earth, where yet the Chaldæan Monarchy was long before riſen, and now near expiration. But to paſs this over, I anſwer more diſtinctly to the teſtimony of Irenæus; Firſt, that what he affirms concerning John's viſion at the end of Domitian, is not of all, but particularly of that Viſion of the number of the beaſt, c. 13. 18. Thus will Euſebius's words be underſtood, Εἰ ἦν ἔδει ἀναφανδὸν ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ κηρυττεσθαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, δι' ἐκείνου ἂν ἐῤῥέθη τὸ ἀντίχριστον ἐωράθη, ὁ γὰρ πρὸ πολλοῦ χρόνου ἑωράθη, &c. If the name of Antichriſt ought to be proclaimed openly now, it would have been declared by him that ſaw the revelation, for it was not ſeen any long time ago. Where 'tis clear that ἑωράθη was ſeen may belong to τὸ ὄνομα the name of the beaſt, as before ἐῤῥέθη, declared, did. And that it not only may, but muſt be ſo underſtood, appears by the Latin of Irenæus (which only is extant) which reads it thus, Antichriſti nomen per ipſum utique editum fuiſſet, qui & Apocalypſin viderat; neque enim ante multum temporis viſum eſt, ſed penè ſub noſtro ſeculo ad finem Domitiani imperii, The name of Antichriſt would have been publiſhed by him, who ſaw the Apocalypſe; for it was not ſeen any long time ſince, but almoſt under our age at the end of Domitian's Empire. Where the word viſum in the neuter, ſeen, not viſa in the feminine, belongs apparently to the name, not to the Apocalypſe. Secondly, I anſwer, that although it ſhould ſtill be acknowledged to be the opinion of Irenæus, that John received the Revelation and all his Viſions at the end of Domitian; yet on the other ſide 'tis the affirmation of * Epiphanius, that John propheſied in the time of Claudius Cæſar, when, ſaith he, he was in the Iſle Patmus. And that which may give authority to Epiphanius's teſtimony is this, Firſt, that Epiphanius in that place is a writing againſt the Montaniſts, about the authority of the Apocalypſe, and that the later it were ſeen or written, the more it would have been for his turn toward confuting or anſwering them, whoſe objection it was, that the Church of Thyatira, mentioned in the Apocalypſe, was not yet a Church when that was ſaid to be revealed. And therefore if it had been but uncertain whether it were written ſo early or no, he would without all queſtion have made uſe of this as ſome advantage againſt his adverſaries, whom he was then in confuting. Secondly, that Epiphanius is ſo far from doing this, that he doth twice in the ſame place expreſly affirm, firſt, that his being in the Iſle of Patmus, ſecondly, that his ſeeing theſe Viſions there, yea, and his return from the Iſland, were in the time of Claudius. Having ſaid this for the confirming this aſſertion of Epiphanius to have as much authority as his teſtimony can give it, four arguments I ſhall add for the truth of it. The firſt negative, to the diſparagement of that relation that affirms him baniſh'd by Domitian, and returned after his death in Nerva's reign. For of the perſecution by Domitian there be but two authors mentioned by * Euſebius, Tertullian and Hegeſippus: but of † Tertullian he hath theſe words, περιεῤῥήγνυτο ποτὲ καὶ Δομετιανὸς ταὐτὸ ποιεῖν ἐκείνῳ, μέρος ὢν τ τῆς Νέρωνος ὠμότητος, ἀλλὰ τάχιστα ἐπαύσατο, ἀναδησάμενος εἰς ἧπαρ, Domitian went about to do as Nero had done, being a part of his cruelty, or, as Tertullian's words are, portio Neronis de crudelitate, a portion of Nero for cruelty: ſed facile cœptum repreſſit, reſtitutis etiam quos relegaverat, but he ceaſed from it preſently, and recalled recalled thoſe whom he had baniſhed: which no way agrees with his baniſhing John, and not recalling him all his life, as is ſuppoſed in the other relation, and affirmed by * Euſebius. And therefore Baronius, that is for his baniſhment under Domitian, in the tenth year of his reign, is forced fairly to * reject Tertullian's authority in this matter, giving for it his proof out of Dio, viz. that Nerva releaſed thoſe who were condemned of impiety, and reſtored thoſe who were baniſhed. Which affirmation of Dio's being granted, as far as belongs to thoſe who were in exile, or ſtood condemned at Nerva's coming to the Empire, doth no way prejudice the truth of Tertullian's words, of Domitian's having repreſs'd his ſeverity againſt the Chriſtians, and revoked the baniſhed, (wherein he is much a more competent witneſs than Baronius.) No more doth his killing of his uncle Clemens, and baniſhing his coſin Flavia Domitilla; for that was five years after this time of John's ſuppoſed baniſhment, in the fifteenth or laſt year of Domitian's reign. In the relation of Hegeſippus (a moſt antient writer, that lived in thoſe times) there is no more but this, that Domitian had made a decree for the putting to death all that were of the linage of David; that ſome delators had accuſed ſome of the children of Jude, the kinſman of our Saviour, ὡς ἀπ᾽ γένους ὄντα Δαβὶδ, as ſuch who were of David's ſeed; that Jocatus brought theſe to Domitian, but upon examination being found to be plain men, and ſuch as believed not Chriſt's kingdom to be κοσμικὸς, or ἐπίγειον, of this world, or earthy, but heavenly, and Angelical, to begin at the end of the world, ἐλευθέρους μὲν αὐτοὺς ἀνιέναι, καταπαῦσαι δὲ διὰ προστάγματος τὸν κατὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας διωγμὸν, παυθέντας δὲ τοὺς ἀπολυθέντας ἡγήσασθαι τῆς ἐκκλησίων, he ſet them free, and by Edict took off the perſecution againſt the Church, and they being releaſed became Biſhops in the Church, and continued peaceably, and lived till Trajanus's days. And this certainly agrees very little with the other relation, nor can any account probably be rendred why, when the perſecution of Chriſtians was taken off by the Edict, and εἰρήνη γενομένη peace reſtored to the Church of Chriſt, and when the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, in the ſons of Jude, being by them avowed to the Emperor, was not yet thought fit to be puniſhed in the leaſt, yet John ſhould be baniſhed, and continue in his exile till Nerva's reign, for no other crime but that of being a Chriſtian. Where by the way Baronius's artifice much fails him; Tertullian, ſaith he, fell into his error by following Hegeſippus's authority, but Hegeſippus, ſaith he, ſpake apparently de ea perſecutione quæ mota eſt in Judæos, of that perſecution that was raiſed againſt the Jews, not againſt the Chriſtians. How true that is, will now appear, when the expreſs words are, that by that Emperor's Edict the perſecution againſt the Church (ſure that was not of Jews, but Chriſtians) ceaſed. Secondly that about the ninth year of Claudius the Chriſtians were purſued, and baniſh'd by the Roman Powers. That at that time Claudius baniſhed the Jews out of Rome, is evident by Joſephus, and acknowledged by all; and that by the Jews the Chriſtians are meant, appears by Suetonius in the life of Claudius, c. 25. Judæos impulſore Chreſto aſſiduè tumultuantes Româ expulit, He baniſhed the Jews out of Rome for the tumults which they daily raiſed by the impulſion of Chreſtus. By Chreſtus it is certain that the Roman writers meant Chriſt, calling him Chreſt, and his followers Chreſtians, as Tertullian obſerves, Apol. c. 3. And ſo they that were acted by the impulſion of Chreſt, in that narration, muſt, though called Jews, neceſſarily be reſolved to be Chriſtians, And what was done at Rome, is to be ſuppoſed to have been done alſo in other parts of the Emperor's dominions; and ſo that edict, mentioned Act. 18. 2. was in reaſon to reach to Epheſus, and may juſtly be thought to have involved S. John there. And accordingly Chronologers have placed this baniſhment of his to Patmus in that year. Thirdly, that about Claudius's time it was that the unbelieving Jews began and continued to oppoſe and perſecute the Chriſtian Jews, and thereupon the Gnoſticks compliances (and making as if they were Jews, to avoid perſecutions) are ſo oft taken notice of by S. Paul, Gal. 6. 12. and elſewhere. And by all the Epiſtles both of him and the reſt of the Apoſtles, written from about that time of Claudius, the Gnoſticks are every where touch'd on, as the peſts that were creeping into the Churches, againſt which they endeavoured to fortifie the believers, and aſſure them that thoſe perſecutions of the Jews ſhould be ſhortly ended by their deſtruction (that night of ſadneſs far ſpent, and the day of deliverance and refreſhment at hand, Rom. 13. 12. and c. 16. 20.) and that then the complying Gnoſticks, which were ſo ſolicitous to ſave their lives, ſhould loſe them, that is, ſhould periſh with them. Accordingly, to the very ſame purpoſe is moſt of the Viſion here, that concerned the ſeven Churches, c. 2. 2, 4, 9, 14, 20. and c. 3. 9, 10, &c. and much of the following prophecy, to aſſure them that God would take revenge on theſe impenitent and impure profeſſors, and reſcue the conſtant Chriſtians. And that makes it very reaſonable to believe, that this Viſion was received about the ſame time alſo. A fourth argument will be taken from the account of the eight Kings, or Emperors, c. 17. 10. which cannot, I believe, otherwiſe be made intelligible, but by beginning the account from Claudius, ſo that he, and Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, ſhall be the five that were faln, and then Veſpaſian (in whoſe time I ſuppoſe theſe Viſions were committed to writing by S. John) being the ſixth, ſhall be the one is, and Titus the ſeventh, that is not yet come, and when he comes ſhall ſtay but a little while, reigning but two years and two months, and then the beaſt that was and is not, and is the eighth, and is of the ſeven, and goes to deſtruction, will fall out to be Domitian, to whom (and to whom only of all the Emperors, nay of all men in any ſtory) all thoſe diſtinctive characters will appertain, as that he exerciſed the office of the Emperor, and was called Emperor at Rome, when Veſpaſian was gone into Judea, and after his return became a private man again, delivered up the Empire to him, and ſo was, and is not, and then was the eighth (reckoning from Claudius as the firſt) and the ſon of one of the ſeven, viz. of Veſpaſian, and ſhould be a bloody perſecutor, and accordingly puniſh'd, and ſo go to deſtruction. This ſeems to me to be a demonſtrative character of the time wherein the firſt of theſe Viſions was delivered, and will farther yield ſome anſwer to the authority of Irenæus, by interpreting his words πρὸς τῷ τέλει Δομετιανοῦ ἀρχῆς of the concluſion of that reign of his at Rome, when his father Veſpaſian was in Judæa, in reſpect of which it is ſaid of him, that he was and is not, that is, that reign of his was come to its τέλος or end, was now concluded; making this not improbably that Author's meaning, that John did firſt (in this time of Claudius) receive ſome Viſions concerning this deſtruction of the Jews, and the other attendants of it, and afterward in Veſpaſian's time, while he was in Judæa, and Domitian reigned at Rome, receive more Viſions, that particularly of the number of the beaſt. For I ſuppoſe the ſeveral Viſions of this book were (as thoſe of Iſaiah c. 1. 1. Jeremiah 1. 2, 3. Hoſea 1. 1. Amos 1. 1. Micah 1. 1. in the reigns of ſeveral Kings) received at ſeveral times, not all at once, or in one day. And if againſt that preſumption it be objected, that they were here ſent all together to the Churches of Aſia, and therefore were all received and written at the ſame time, to this the anſwer is moſt obvious, from what we ſee done in the forementioned prophecies of Iſaiah, &c. in the Old Teſtament, which though clearly received in ſeveral Kings Reigns, and each ſent to that King or the people under him to whom they belonged, as 'tis evident that of Hezekiah was, (and not concealed and reſerved till after their death who were concerned in them) were yet long after the time of receiving the firſt of them, put into a book, and a title, comprehending them all, prefix'd to them. And accordingly there is no difficulty to conceive that John, having firſt received the Viſion of the ſeven Churches, and, according to direction, c. 1. 11. ſpeedily ſent it to them, did after that, (as μετὰ ταῦτα, c. 4. 1. literally imports) receive more Viſions, at ſeveral times, and after all, put them together into a Book or volume, and dedicate them anew to the ſeven Churches, c. 1. 3. and this about the forementioned end of Domitian's reigning in his Father's ſtead, that is, in Veſpaſian's time, when he was returning from Judæa to reſume his power again. I can foreſee but one farther objection againſt this date of theſe Viſions, viz. that in the Epiſtle to the Church of Pergamus, c. 2. 13. there is the mention and very name of Antipas the Martyr, ὃς ἀπεκτάνθη who

εκέντησε
ἡ γῆ

Ἀντίπας wherein Antipas is affirmed to have been slain. To this I answer, that this naming of Antipas by way of prophecy may be as easily and probably believed of the Spirit of God, before the time of his suffering, as the naming of Cyrus before he was born, which we know was done in the Old Testament, nay as Christ's telling S. Peter that he should be put to death, and particularly crucified, or as Agabus telling S. Paul what should befal him at Jerusalem, Act. 21. 10. or, as I conceive, Simeon's telling the mother of Christ, that a sword should pass through her soul, Luk. 2. 35. Saint Hilary in his Prologue to the Psalms offers instances of this; As, saith he, when in some of the Psalms, of which Moses was the author, there is yet mention of things after Moses, viz. of Samuel, Psal. 99. 6. before he was born, nulli mirum aut difficile videri oportere, this ought not to seem strange or hard to any, when in the books of the Kings, Josias is by name propheſyed of before he was born, 1 King. 13. 2. And if Zacharias the son of Barachias, Mat. 23. be that Zachary the son of Baruch that was killed close before the siege of Jerusalem, (of which there is little reason to doubt) there is then a direct example of what is here thus said of Antipas, the ἐφονεύσατε ἐφονεύσατε ye have killed being there said of him, as ἀπεκτάνθη he was killed here (see Note on Mat. 23. g.) That Antipas was a contemporary of the Apostles, and when he died, was extreme old, will hereafter appear out of the Menology, and therefore at what time soever this Vision were written, 'tis certain there was such a man as Antipas, and no doubt a Christian, if not Bishop of Pergamus then; And so 'tis less strange that he should be here mentioned by name, than that Cyrus should, before he was born; and no more strange than for any other living person to have his Martyrdom particularly foretold. As for the sense of ἀπεκτάνθη was killed, which may be thought to conclude him already killed, sure that is of little weight, it being very ordinary for prophecies to be delivered in words which signifie the time past. All this may serve for a competent satisfaction to the grand difficulty. And howsoever in a matter of some uncertainty we may possibly mistake in the particularity of time, wherein the Visions were received, yet that they belong (much of them) to the business of the destruction of the Jews, there will be little question, when the particulars come to be viewed.

This being thus far evident, it follows to be observed, that the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus was but one part of this coming of Christ, I mean of the judgments upon the Jews. Many other bloody acts there were of this Tragedy still behind when that was over. Not to mention Domitian's edict of killing all David's kin, (Eusebius l. 3. c. 19.) The first I shall insist upon is that under Trajan, till whose reign S. John himself lived (saith Eusebius l. 3. c. 23. out of Irenæus l. 2. c. 39. and l. 3. c. 3. and out of Clemens Alexandrinus) though Euseb. l. 4. c. 2. not to this part of it. In this Emperor's time it went very heavily with the Jews, τὰ τῶν Ἰουδαίων συμφορῆς κακοῖς ἐπιπήλοις ἤκμαζεν, saith he, their calamities came tumbling in upon them, one on the back of another; For both in Alexandria, and the other parts of Ægypt, and even in Cyrene, many Jews behaving themselves seditiously, and at last breaking out into open wars and horrid cruelties, described by Dion and Spartianus, as well as Eusebius, and once having worsted the Grecians, they of Ægypt, and they of Cyrene joining together under the conduct of Lucuas, and overrunning all Ægypt, the issue of it was, that Trajan sent Marcius Turbo with an army by sea and land, horse and foot, who in a long continued war killed great multitudes of them; and lest they in Mesopotamia should, or suspecting that they had already joined with them, the Emperor sent to Quintus Lucius Æmilius, that he should destroy them all utterly out of that province; and for his care in obeying that command, he was, saith Eusebius, constituted Ἰουδαίας ἡγεμών, Ruler of Judæa under the Emperor. These passages we find in Eusebius l. 4. c. 2. and, saith he, all the Greek writers of the Heathens, who set down the stories of those times, have the same verbatim; and so indeed they have. See Dio, as also Spartianus. And the number of the slain Jews in that calamity is reckoned to be no less than two hundred thousand in that reign of Trajan's: and this, if there had been none before, and if there were no more behind, might well be styled a coming of Christ in the clouds against his crucifiers, a lamentable judgment on all the tribes of that land, and so might own the expressions in that seventh verse, and some part of the after Visions.

But beside this, yet farther, within few years more, in the time of Adrian, Trajan's immediate successor, (who began his reign An. Dom. 118.) there befel more sad destructions upon the Jews, and particularly upon Jerusalem it self, occasioned by the rising of Barchocheba, who being but a villain, φονικὸς καὶ λῃστικός τις ἀνὴρ, one that lived by robbing and killing, took upon him to come as a Messiah, as a light from heaven to the Jews, and therefore styled himself Son of a star. And with those that he thus raised, a great war there was waged by the Romans in the eighteenth year of Adrian, at the town Bethek, not far from Jerusalem; and the issue was, that the Jews were under a most miserable siege, and Rufus governour of Judæa, on occasion of this rising, without any mercy destroyed all he could come to, men, women and children, μυριάδας ὁλοῦς, saith Eusebius l. 4. c. 6. whole myriads together; and, to conclude, there came out an Edict of Adrian's, after the death of the ring-leader, interdicting all Jews, and forbidding them to return to their city Jerusalem again, or so much as to look toward it: to which end the foundations of the Temple were ploughed up by Rufus, (and so Christ's prophecy not 'till now exactly fulfilled, of not one stone upon another) the city inhabited by the Romans, new built, and named Ælia, from Ælius Adrianus, and (they say) the Statue of a Swine set over the gate of it, to reproach the Jews, and banish their very eyes from it. And this was another passage which might well be referred to in that place, as matter of mournful spectacle to all the Tribes of Judæa, and as mournfully represented in some of the Visions. To which must be farther added, that the unbelieving Jews are not the only men to whom the destruction here reveal'd in these Visions did belong, but as notably also, and well-nigh as soon, the erroneous vile Christians of those times (which were many of them Jews also, and (those that were not) Judaizers, or compliers with the Jews) viz. the Gnosticks, so oft spoken of in S. Paul's Epistles, and by S. Peter, and S. James, S. Jude, and S. John also, with intimation of their approaching destruction, which here is visible in the Vision of, and the causes of the several destructions that lighted on the seven Churches of Asia, (if not wholly, yet) at least on the Gnosticks and other hereticks among them; of whom saith Eusebius, after the enumerating of their heresies, λόγου θᾶττον εἰς τὸ παραχρῆμα ἀπεσβήκασι, they vanished to nothing in a moment, and this, saith he, in Trajan's time, l. 3. c. κθ'. And then in the second place, the other enemies of Christ, partakers in the crucifying of him, and afterward eminent persecuters of Christians, those of heathen Rome, as will appear in the exposition of the Visions. And then thirdly, as in a parenthesis, Gog and Magog, c. 20. 8. which after the peaceable flourishing of Christianity for a thousand years, should waft the Church again, the Turks in the East, &c. And then all the enemies of God, at the fatal last day of doom, c. 20. 11.

That this was the summary matter of these ensuing Visions, the most serious pondering of every part soon made unquestionable to me. And of it the Reader may here before-hand receive this short scheme, viz. that, after the Preface, in the first Chapter, to v. 10. and the Visions about the seven Churches of Asia, each of them set down distinctly, c. 2, and 3. this book contains, First, the proceedings of God with the Jews, from the fourth to the twelfth chapter: Secondly, the infancy and growth of the Church of Christ in order to the heathen world, 'till it came through great oppositions to get possession of the Roman Empire, partly by destroying, partly by converting the heathen and villanous, impure Idol-worshippers, from the twelfth to the twentieth chapter: Thirdly, the peaceable, flourishing state of the Church for a thousand years, (and after that the breaking out of the Turk, and harassing the Eastern Churches, briefly touch'd, together with their destruction, and the end of the world) moſt rhetorically deſcribed from chap. 20th to the 6th verſe of chap. 22. and from thence to the end of the Book a formal concluſion of the whole matter. All which is ſomewhat proportionable to that which old Tobit prophetically ſpoke of the times that were to follow him, c. 14. 5. which he divided into three diſtinct ſpaces; Firſt, the re-building of the Temple, which was now long paſt, and this Book hath nothing to do with that: Secondly, the conſummations of the ſeaſons of the age, that is, the deſtruction of the Jewiſh ſtate, which is the firſt main period here. This is not ſo clearly ſet down in our ordinary Engliſh verſion as in the Greek it is; for that reads not as the Engliſh doth, until the time of that age be fulfilled, confining the continuance of the ſecond Temple to the time of that age; but, ἕως πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος, till the ſeaſons of the age be fulfilled, a phraſe near of kin to thoſe many which are uſed in the New Teſtament, for the deſtruction of this people, the latter days, or ſeaſons, συντέλεια αἰῶνος, the conſummation, or concluſion, of the age, Mat. 24. 3. But in the Hebrew copy ſet out, and rendred by Paulus Fagius, (which appears to be tranſlated skilfully by ſome Jew out of the Original Chaldee) there is a very conſiderable addition to this purpoſe, ועוד יצאו בגלות רב וגדול, And again they ſhall go into a long and great captivity, noting the greatneſs and duration of this beyond all the former. That theſe words in that Hebrew copy are the true reading, appears by the ſubſequent mention of a return, which cannot be ſenſe, without this precedent mention of a captivity. And that it belongs to that deſtruction of them by the Romans, appears by another paſſage, added alſo in that Hebrew copy, and directly parallel to Mat. 24. 31. For as there after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, v. 29. is mention of the Angels ſent to gather the elect Jews from the four winds, (parallel to the viſion of the ſealing, Rev. 7.) ſo it follows in Tobit, but, God, holy and bleſſed, ſhall remember them, and gather them from the four corners of the world. After which follows thirdly, the ſtate of Chriſtianity, the glorious building of Jeruſalem, and the houſe of God, foretold by the prophets, (and that building ſet down, c. 13. 16, 17. with Sapphires, Emrods, precious ſtones, pure gold, Beryll, Carbuncle, ſtones of Ophir, in the ſame manner as 'tis deſcribed in theſe Viſions, c. 21. 18, 19.) and that to continue for ever or, as the Hebrew reads, for ever and ever; and as a prime branch of that period the converting of the nations, and burying their idols, (which is here the ſecond main period) v. 6, 7. This parallel prediction in Tobit may be of ſome force to authorize the interpretation of theſe Viſions; in all which, as there may be ſeveral particular paſſages either ſo obſcure (from the nature of prophetick ſtyle) as not to be eaſily explicated, or ſo copious, (and capable of more than one explication) as to render it uncertain which ſhould be preferr'd (in which reſpect I hope, and expect that much more light may be added to it by more ſtrict ſurveys, and comparing the expreſſions in this Book with the like phraſes or paſſages in the Prophets of the Old Teſtament) ſo for the general matter of theſe Viſions, I ſuppoſe, upon pondering the whole, there will be little doubt but theſe are the true lineaments of it.

And it hath been matter of much ſatisfaction to me, that what hath upon ſincere deſire of finding out the truth, and making my addreſſes to God for his particular directions in this work of difficulty (without any other light to go before me) appeared to me to be the meaning of this prophecy, hath, for the main of it, in the ſame manner repreſented it ſelf to ſeveral perſons of great piety and learning (as ſince I have diſcerned) none taking it from the other, but all from the ſame light ſhining in the prophecy it ſelf. Among which number I now alſo find the moſt learned Hugo Grotius, in thoſe poſthumous notes of his on the Apocalypſe, lately publiſh'd.

And this is all that ſeemed uſeful to be here premiſed concerning the interpretation of this Book.

THE REVELATION OF John the Divine.

THE Title of this Book as it is ordinarily ſet, Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰωάννου τοῦ θεολόγου, the Revelation of John the Divine, hath in it ſome ſeeming difference from the firſt words of the Book, which were written by S. John himſelf, (whereas that other (as the reſt of the titles of the Books of the New Teſtament) was by the Church of the firſt ages affix'd unto it,) Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. And this difference is to be reconciled, not by making one of them to refer to the perſon that received, the other to him that gave the Revelation; for as John received it from Chriſt, ſo Chriſt alſo received it from his Father, and therefore 'tis here added, v. 1. which God gave him: but it muſt be by diſtinguiſhing of the time and manner of theſe revealings. God formerly revealed theſe future events to Chriſt the Son of man, as the Mediator by him now deſigned to conveigh all knowledge and grace to us; and this he did when Chriſt entred on his Prophetick office (long before the time here ſpecified) from whence it was that Chriſt, whilſt here on earth, foretold (in the parable of the King and the Huſbandmen, Luke 20. 16. and Mat. 24. and ſparſim at other times) many of the particulars repreſented in this prophecy, eſpecially that of the deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews. And in this reſpect this whole Book is entituled the Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, that is, that prophecy which Jeſus Chriſt received from his Father, as the viſion of of Iſaiah, &c. is the prophecy which Iſaiah received from God, or, that God gave to Iſaiah. But then as Chriſt thought fit to give a repreſentation of this to his beloved diſciple, John, and ſo John received it, as a prophecy, to deliver to others, ſo 'tis fitly ſtiled (here in the title) the Revelation of John, who received it (in viſion, or ecſtaſie, v. 10.) by the Angel from Chriſt, as Chriſt received it from his Father. For this is the meaning of the word Ἀποκάλυψις Revelation, a word ordinarily uſed in Daniel, to ſignifie any knowledge extraordinarily communicated to any by God. Thus is the word uſed 2 Cor. 12. 1. where he puts together viſions and revelations of the Lord (and perhaps expreſſes it, v. 2. by ἄνθρωπον ἐν Χριστῷ a man in Chriſt, as here ver. 10. by being in the Spirit ſnatch'd into the third Heaven,) ſo again ver. 7. abundance of Revelations. So Gal. 2. 2. I went up by Revelation, that is, by impulſion of the Spirit of God, and Epheſ. 3. 3. by Revelation (that is, by Chriſt's ſpeaking to him from heaven, and other the like viſions, which, it appears, he had, 2 Cor. 12. 7.) God made known to me the myſtery. In other places the word is uſed in a greater latitude, for an expoſition or interpretation of any ſacred figure, &c. however come by, though not by immediate inſpiration from God, the דרש among the Hebrews, expounding of difficulties (ſee Note on 1 Cor. 14. b.) and yet more widely 1 Pet. 1. 7. for Chriſt's revealing himſelf in judgment on his adverſaries, and reſcuing the faithful. But here it is according to ſtrict idiom no more than viſion or prophecy, and ſo the title of Enoch's book, cited Jude 15. was Ἀποκάλυψις Ἐνὼχ the Revelation of Enoch, but in S. Jude's ſtyle (προεφήτευσεν Ἐνὼχ) the prophecy of Enoch. And if in this notion of the word (which is peculiarly that which here and c. 1. 1. belongs to it) Mr. Brightman intituled his Comment on this book Apocalypſim Ἀποκαλύψεως, the Revelation of the Revelation (as it ſeems he did by [a] applying the words of Scripture, The Lord hath ſpoken, who can but propheſie? to his own performances in that Comment, adding that God not only ſpake of old by dreams and viſions, but daily now, whenſoever he inlightens the minds of his ſervants to the fetching out any hidden truth of his word: and that when God doth thus communicate with any, he underſtandeth a neceſſity impoſed on him to make it known to others, and that the danger is not ſhewn to him for his own private ſake,) I cannot but affirm that he hath groſly miſtaken his buſineſs, and endeavoured to impoſe falſe prophecies upon his Reader. For though by the help and grace of God, ſought only by prayer, and by the uſe of means inſtrumental to that end, and ſubordinate to that grace (ſuch are comparing Scripture with Scripture, and Prophetick expreſſions with the Prophetick ſtyle, and Symbols with Symbols, and the obſervation of the uſe of words and phraſes in the ſacred dialect) it be poſſible to attain to the expounding or revealing ſome ſecret ſenſes of Scriptures, which without the uſes of theſe means will not be attainable; yet may not the interpretations of any meer man (which hath not the gift of prophecy) pretend to be the word of God. And whoſoever ſhall profeſs thus to reveal the Revelation, by God ſpeaking to him, and doth not evidence his calling and miſſion prophetick, eſpecially if he pretend to have learn'd from the Revelation things ſo diſtant from what there we read, as are Germany, and France, and Britany, of this laſt Century, from the Churches of Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, in Aſia, then in being when S. John by Chriſt's appointment wrote this prophecy to them, muſt needs be look'd on as a falſe ſeer or falſe prophet. And this is done by Mr. Brightman in expreſs words, ſaying, that he [b] had learn'd out of the Apocalypſe that a moſt heavy trial was now ſuddenly to invade the Chriſtian world (as if what was ſaid to be ſudden near 1600 years ſince, were ſufficiently fulfilled by being near at hand forty four years ago) that the Churches of Britain, Germany, and France, were moſt favourably admoniſhed of this tempeſt by Epiſtles written to them by name; that he by divine impulſion, or direction, (or what elſe divinitus can ſignifie) found theſe very Epiſtles, which ſignifie this thing, and from the inſcriptions of them underſtood to whom they were ſent, and durſt not but diſpatch them to them, leſt either by intercepting or concealing them he ſhould be condemned of wrong offered to the divine Majeſty. And that [c] thoſe Epiſtles do not foretel this by any doubtful conjecture, but teach in clear words what he thus thinks fit to affix on them. The leaſt that can be ſaid of this is, that 'tis the adding to the prophecies of this book, c. 22. 18. the obtruding his own fancies for Divine revelations. And if the ſad calamities which have befallen this Britiſh Church ſince the writing of this New Apocalypſe of his, be conceived to conclude him a true Prophet, in his preſaging againſt the Angel of that Church, it will be as reaſonable to aſcribe divinity to the heathen Auguries and Oracles alſo, as oft as any part of the event followed any one of them: whereas indeed of any contingent future event there being only two things poſſible, either that it will, or that it will not come to paſs, and perſecutions, and ſchiſms, and commotions, and ſeditions, and changes of Government being being ſo frequent, that whatſoever Church or Kingdom hath long withſtood ſuch onſets, may at laſt by ſome advantage induſtriouſly ſought, and maliciouſly laid hold on, not improbably ſink and fall under them, whatſoever is or can be foretold in this kind with any common prudence, will not be improbable to fall out (in ſome part) within forty or fifty years ſpace. Nay, whatever 'tis, ſome advantage it will have toward the completion by having been foretold: As when by the flying of the birds (ſo caſual and unſignificant a thing as that) the Roman Augurs promiſed the ſoldiers a victory on their ſide, the courage thus infuſed into them by believing that prediction, did oft contribute very much to the obtaining the victory; the ſame may in ſome meaſure be ſaid in this particulaar. But much more conſiderable is the influence and conſequence of that doctrine which is ſo frequently inculcated by the Expoſitors of this Book, That the people are they that muſt pull down Antichriſt, whilſt Kings eſpouſe his cauſe: than which nothing can be more effectual and direct toward the raiſing and fomenting of commotions, to which the proſperity of them is as probably conſequent, as victory to the number and courage of an Army; and ſo though the preſcience of God (which is not his decree) and the predictions of true Prophets, which are but rays of that preſcience, have no proper immediate influence on the effect, nothing of cauſality in them, yet theſe vain deluſions of thoſe falſe Prophets may have had much of (improperly ſo called, yet) real efficiency, and if ſo deſigned by them, of guilt in them. All which proves the wickedneſs and dangerouſneſs of ſuch deſigns, but gives no Authority to the interpretations.

Having ſaid thus much in general of Mr. Brightman's Apocalypſe, I ſhall not think it amiſs to give the Reader ſome view or taſte of his way of interpreting, and the grounds wherewith he contents himſelf. And it ſhall be by mentioning his explications of the prophecies of the ſeven Churches, which are in themſelves the moſt clear and intelligible of any part of the whole book, (as belonging peculiarly and by name to the chief Epiſcopal Sees of Aſia, ſufficiently known to all, and, in reſpect of the matter and expreſſions uſed in them, more perſpicuous than almoſt any part of the prophecies of Iſaiah, but much more than thoſe of Ezekiel and Daniel) but by him detorted and wreſted from their native intelligible ſenſe to far diſtant purpoſes. This view I ſhall not chuſe to give here out of its place, but leave the Reader to make it up, by putting together theſe few Notes on the three enſuing Chapter, ch. 1. g. ch. 2. b. d. g. ch. 3. a.

That the title of Θεολόγος the Divine, is here given to the writer of theſe Viſions, and not Ἀποστόλος the Apoſtle, is not from any imagination of thoſe that affix'd it, that the Apoſtle John was not writer of them, but becauſe that title of Θεολόγος was by the Antients, Origen eſpecially, beſtowed on this Apoſtle, in reſpect of the divinity and ſublimity of his manner of writing, obſervable in his Goſpel, and particularly becauſe he began it with ſetting down the divinity of Chriſt (whereas others begin with his birth, or humanity) the Θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος, the Word was God. This title had by the Platoniſts been given to Orpheus, in relation to the book concerning the Gods written by him, and ſo to Linus and Muſæus alſo; thoſe three ordinarily known by the name of Theologi poetæ. b. CHAP. I.

Paraphraſe.

*ſuddenly, ſpeedily ἐν τάχει † he ſignified them ſending by his Angel ἐσήμανεν ἀποστείλας διὰ τοῦ Ἀγγ. * who had teſtified the Ὃς ἐμαρτύρησε

1. THE Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, to ſhew unto his ſervants things that muſt * ſhortly come to paſs; and † he ſent and ſignified it by his Angel unto his ſervant John:]

1. The prophecy, or viſion, or Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which (as to our great Prophet and Interceſſor, or Mediator between God and us) was put into his hands by his Father, that he might, as he pleaſed, make known to his Apoſtles ſome things that ſhould ſuddenly come to paſs (many of them in the age wherein they lived, as his dealing with his crucifiers, and their perſecutors, the Jews) and (as ſome of them he made known to them all together, whilſt he was alive, as then near at hand, Mat. 24. 34. Luke 21. Mar. 13. ſo) now he hath thought fit to ſend a ſymbolical repreſentation of the ſame, and all the reſt, the whole matter of this prophecy, by an Angel to John his moſt beloved diſciple;

2. * Who bare record of the word of God, of [a] the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, and of all things that he ſaw.]

2. That John that had preached or given in his teſtimony concerning the word of God, the doctrine, and deeds, and ſufferings, and reſurrection of Chriſt (whereby he teſtified his to be the doctrine and will of his Father) and ſome particulars which he peculiarly ſaw, (ſee John 19. Note d. and 1 John 1. 1.) not taken notice of by others.

3. Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep thoſe things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.]

3. In this Revelation other prophecies there are, and predictions of things future (after this of the Jews deſtruction) and therein, mix'd, the admirable ways of God's providence in permitting and puniſhing his enemies, exerciſing and rewarding the patience of his ſervants, the conſtant Chriſtians. And ſo the prophecies here ſet down of the deſtructions of the enemies of Chriſt, are matter of comfort to all them that are now under perſecution, and are ſuch as concern every one that now lives to read and obſerve, and to perform what herein he is admoniſhed to perform. For the time is cloſe at hand, wherein one after another, all theſe prophecies, tending all to ſet forth God's wonderful providence in puniſhing his enemies and protecting his ſervants, ſhall be ſucceſſively fulfilled.

4. John to the ſeven Churches in [b] Aſia: Grace be unto you and peace † from him which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from [c] the ſeven ſpirits which are before his throne.]

4. Theſe Revelations which I John thus received, I ſend in an Epiſtle to the ſeven Churches of Aſia, which I ſalute my ſelf, and am commanded to ſend them greeting from the eternal God, whoſe name is Jehovah, which ſignifies, He that is, and was, and ſhall be, and from the Angels which attend and wait upon God, ch. 4. 5. and are, as in the Sanhedrim, the officers waiting on the head of the Sanhedrim, to go on all their meſſages, or, as in the Church, the Deacons, to attend the commands of the Governour of the Church, and to perform them, (ſee Mat. 18. 5. And from Jeſus Chriſt, him that teſtified and made known, being here on earth, the will of his Father with all fidelity, (ſee Note a. and ch. 3. c.) and that being crucified roſe from the dead (and ſo as our firſt-fruits, 1 Cor. 15. 20. aſcertained our reſurrection, wherein we his brethren ſhall be like him our elder brother) and hath all power given unto him in heaven and in earth, is ſuperiour to all the Princes of this world, (Dan. 4. 17.) whoſe power or perſecutions ye may fear: to him that hath made uſe of that power to expreſs the reality of his love to us, in purging us from our ſins, obtaining juſtification and ſanctification for us, by the ſatisfaction wrought by the ſhedding of his blood, and all the merits of his death (and the power of his reſurrection, and the bleſſed conſequents of it, the ſending of his Spirit, and his own Interceſſion at the right hand of his Father) all conſequents of that blood-ſhedding of his, upon which God ſo highly exalted him above all, Philip. 2. 9.

9. I John, who alſo am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus Chriſt, was in the Iſle that is called Patmos for the word of God, and for the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt.]

9. I John, who write this Epiſtle to you, and who with other the faithful Chriſtian Jews have ſuffered perſecution, and do ſtill hold out conſtant and patient, through the power of Jeſus Chriſt (who now reigns, though once he ſuffered) not permitting any temptation to ſhake my faith, or drive me from the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, was in the Iſle of Patmos, baniſhed thither for preaching and promulgating the doctrine and faith of Jeſus Chriſt. (See v. 2. Note a.)

10. I was in the ſpirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet,]

10. And being there excluded from the ſociety of men, I was vouchſafed by God to receive Revelations from him; and accordingly I fell into an ecſtaſie or tranſportation, on the * day of Chriſt's reſurrection, the firſt day of the week, either the annual, or the weekly feſtivity, ſet apart to commemorate his reſurrection, and as upon a feſtivity, I heard the ſound of a trumpet, Pſal. 47. 5. or a voice as loud as the ſound of the trumpet, and that voice behind me, Iſ. 30. 21. calling to me unexpectedly.

* Κυριακὴ τῆ ἀναστάσεως Χριστοῦ μνημόσυνον φέρουσα, Andr. Cæſar. The Lord's day is that which carries the memorial of Chriſt's reſurrection.

11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt; and, what thou ſeeſt, write in a book, and ſend it unto the ſeven Churches which are in Aſia, unto Epheſus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.]

11. And that which was ſaid, was, that he that ſpake to me was the eternal God, and that I was commanded by him to write down what was or ſhould be (at this or at any other time) ſhewed me, and to ſend all together in an Epiſtle to the ſeven Churches of Chriſt in Aſia, of which Epheſus was the chief Metropolis: which accordingly now I do.

12. And I turned to ſee the voice that ſpake with me: and being turned I ſaw ſeven golden Candleſticks,]

12. And hearing the voice behind me, I turned to ſee who it was, from whence this voice came to me. And upon this occaſion of turning, there appeared unto me in the viſion the repreſentation (in Symbols or viſible Hieroglyphicks) of what that voice v. 11. ſaid unto me: To ſignifie the ſeven Churches, appeared ſeven golden Candleſticks.

13. And in the midſt of the ſeven Candleſticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.]

13. To ſignifie Chriſt, that eternal God that ſpake to me, and ſaid, I am Alpha and Omega, there appeared an Angel in the midſt of the Candleſticks (like him deſcribed Dan. 10. 5.) in a very ſolemn manner, habited like the high prieſt, Levit. 6. 12. and 16. 4. (to ſignifie Chriſt our merciful high prieſt, who hath compaſſion on our infirmities, and intercedes and prays for us, to be repreſented by this Angel) in an upper garment, long, ſuch as he uſed to wear (ſee Note on Mat. 5. 6.) and girt with a girdle, (as he was too) and that of gold, (as Rev. 15. 6.) after the manner of the high Prieſt, the curious girdle of whoſe Ephod was of gold, blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine twined linnen, Exod. 39. 5. and by that intermixture of gold, diſcriminated from the girdles of ordinary prieſts (ſee Note on Luke 12. b.) and this belt or girdle girt about the paps.

14. His head and his hairs were white † like wool, * as white as ſnow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15. And his feet like unto † [f] fine braſs, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the ſound of many waters.]

16. And in his right hand (ſignifying his approbation and care of the ſeven ſingular Governours which were placed in thoſe ſeven Churches, repreſented by the Candleſticks:) and there came out of his mouth, inſtead of a tongue or words, a ſword of ſuch a kind as betokened ſudden deſtructions, and the ſame was ſignified by his looks, which was the reſemblance of the ſun when it ſhineth in its greateſt brightneſs.

17. And when I ſaw him, I fell at his feet as dead: and he laid his right hand upon me, ſaying unto me, Fear not; I am the firſt and the laſt:]

17. And when I ſaw Chriſt thus repreſented, the terribleneſs of the viſion and Chriſt's appearance in it was ſuch, that it put me into a fainting-fit (ſee Dan. 10. 8.) but he held me up, and encouraged me not to fear, but to truſt in him, as the eternal God, who would certainly do me no hurt, how terrible ſoever he proved to his enemies, putting me in mind who he was, the God of heaven, though vilified and crucified upon the earth, (which crucifying of him, and proceeding in like manner with his ſervants, is the thing that he comes now to puniſh, and therefore there would be no matter of fear, (but much rather of comfort and joy) to any faithful Chriſtian.)

Even that Chriſt which lived here on earth, and was put to death (and ſo knows how to have compaſſion on all faithful Chriſtians that ſuffer in like manner, Heb. 2. 17.) and roſe again to life, and now lives never to die again, and hath all power over that inviſible ſtate and continuance in death, and over death it ſelf (ſee Note on Mat. 11. 1.) being able to fetch any man out of that condition, and reſtore him to life again, and ſo fit to relieve and reward any that ſuffers, though it be death it ſelf, for his ſake. To which purpoſe, ſaith he, for the evidencing the truth of what now I ſay, that is, of my faithful care of all thoſe that continue conſtant to me (whilſt I deſtroy the obdurate.)

h. 20. And for that which thou now ſeeſt, which thou art to write alſo, (as I bad thee, v. 11.) the meaning of it is, that it repreſenteth to thee the ſeven Churches, to which thou muſt communicate theſe viſions in an Epiſtle, and the ſeven Governours of them; The ſeven ſtars which were ſhewed thee in the viſion, ſignifie ſo many Governours of thoſe ſo many Churches, v. 11. and the Candleſticks ſignifie the Churches themſelves.

Annotations on Chap. I.

a. ἀποκάλυψις Ἰησοῦ. V. 2. The teſtimony of Jeſus] The teſtimony of Jeſus is the Goſpel, as it was preached and teſtified by him, the μάρτυς πιστὸς, moſt creditable authentick witneſs, ver. 5. and accordingly 'tis called 1 Cor. 1. 6. the teſtimony of Chriſt, and 2 Tim. 1. 8. the teſtimony of our Lord, and the teſtimony of God, 1 Cor. 2. 1. For as there is the ἀποκάλυψις record or teſtimony that God teſtified of his Son, Joh. 8. 18. both the voice from heaven, and the miracles which he did, &c. and as the Apoſtles office (and the Baptiſts, Joh. 5. 30.) was peculiarly, that they ſhould teſtifie of Jeſus, Joh. 19. 35. and 21. 24. Act. 1. 22. ſo it was the great Prophetick office of Chriſt that he ſhould teſtifie of the truth, declare the will of God, and demonſtrate (by prophecies, by miracles, by laying down his life, and by his Reſurrection, and deſcent of the holy Ghoſt) that it was ſuch, (ſee Note on ch. 3. c.) Thus in the ninth verſe of this Chapter, where John is ſaid to be in the Iſle Patmos, (that is, baniſhed for the word of God, and for the teſtimony of Jeſus,) the meaning is evident, that he was in that exile for having preached that Goſpel of Chriſt: Λόγῳ Θεοῦ, εὐαγγέλιον ὁ ἔγραψεν, ſaith Andreas Cæſarienſis, the word of God, is the Goſpel which he wrote; not that it is certain that he had written it when he was baniſhed into Patmos, but becauſe that very Goſpel which he wrote upon the entreaty of the Aſian Biſhops, for the confuting of Cerinthus, &c. was was in ſubſtance preached before by him throughout all Aſia, and many converted to the faith by it.

b. Ἀσία — V. 4. Aſia] That Aſia here ſignifies not that fourth part in the diviſion of the world, but (in another notion of the word known to Geographers) the Lydian or Proconſular Aſia, is largely demonſtrated by the moſt reverend Archbiſhop of Armagh in his diſcourſe on that ſubject. Thus the word is uſed Act. 19. 26. where Paul is ſaid to have perſuaded much people, not only at Epheſus, but almoſt through all Aſia; where Aſia muſt needs be that Province of which Epheſus was the chief Metropolis: and ſo Act. 20. 18. all the Biſhops of Aſia are (by letters ſent to Epheſus) ſummoned to meet Paul at Miletus; where as he foretels them, v. 29. that ſoon after his departure cruel ravenous wolves will enter in, not ſparing the flock, and that among themſelves will ariſe falſe teachers, and accordingly Timothy was then left Metropolitan of Epheſus, that he might charge ſuch μὴ ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, not to diſſeminate theſe falſe doctrines, 1 Tim. 1. 3. ſo it appears it ſoon fell out: for S. Paul tells Timothy, 2 Tim. 1. 15. as a thing known by him, that πάντες οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ all they that were in Aſia rejected him, which in all reaſon is to be underſtood of the generality of the Biſhops near, if not under this Metropolitan, of whom two are there named by him, Phygellus and Hermogenes. That it was the hereſie of the Gnoſticks that thus infeſted theſe Churches, may appears by the Epiſtles to Timothy, where they are diſtinctly named by the ψευδώνυμος γνῶσις, Science falſly ſo called, 1 Tim. 6. 20. and by the μῦθοι and γενεαλογίαι, fabulous, Poetical Theology, conſiſting of ſtrange Genealogies, imitated from the heathen Poets, which the Valentinians had from the Gnoſticks, and are deſcribed at large by Irenæus in his deſcription of that hereſie. And accordingly here is Chriſt's meſſage ſent to theſe Biſhops of Aſia, to reprehend and warn them againſt this hereſie. Now in this Aſia, as there were many cities, ſo there were ſome metropoles, chief, or mother cities, to each of which the leſſer adjacent cities were ſubordinate. Of this ſort the firſt was Epheſus, ſaith Ulpian, τῆς μητροπόλεως Ἐφεσος πρώτης, in l. Obſerv. D. de Off. Proconſ. Such again was Thyatira, ſaith Ptolemy, Θυάτειρα μητρόπολις, Geogr. l. 1. c. 2. Such Philadelphia, in the * Council of Conſtantinople ſub Mena; Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφέων μητροπόλεως τῆς Λυδῶν ἐπαρχίας, the Biſhop of the Metropolis of Philadelphia of the Province of the Lydians. Of the ſame rank are Laodicea, Sardis and Smyrna affirmed to be by Pliny, (Nat. hiſt. l. 6. c. 29.) as cities wherein the Roman Proconſuls reſiding, kept courts for all the adjoining cities to reſort to; and the ſame he affirms of Pergamus, c. 30. By which it appears that all the ſeven cities here named were Metropoles, and accordingly under theſe ſeven all other Chriſtian Churches of this whole Proconſular Aſia were contained: of which number as it is reaſonable to think that there were more than ſeven at the time of writing this Epiſtle, (Paul having ſpent two years in preaching the Goſpel in Aſia, and all the inhabitants ſaid to have received the faith, Act. 19. 10.) ſo it is evident in Ignatius's time (which was not long after this) that Magneſia and Trallis, upon the banks of Mæander (Τράλλεις πόλις Λυδίας πρὸς τῷ Μαιάνδρῳ ποταμῷ, ſaith Stephanus Byzantius πε. πόλ.) being conſequently included in this Aſia, were Epiſcopal Churches, or Cities, Damas being Biſhop of one, Polybius of the other, and ſo ſubordinate to the Metropolitan of Epheſus.

c. ἑπτὰ πνεύματα — Ib. The ſeven ſpirits] There is ſome queſtion what is here meant by the ἑπτὰ πνεύματα ſeven ſpirits. Some interpret them to be the holy Ghoſt, in reſpect of the ſeven graces of that Spirit; ſome the ſeveral operations of God's providence, which they conceive to be mentioned ch. 5. 12. and noted by the ſeven eyes, Zach. 4. 10. and Rev. 5. 6. which are there called the ſeven ſpirits of God ſent unto all the land: but δοκιμώτερον τοὺς ἀγγέλους ταῦτα νοεῖν, 'Tis more reaſonable to underſtand the Angels by them, ſaith Andreas Cæſarienſis. So Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 6. Ἑπτὰ μέν εἰσιν οἱ τὰ μεγίστων δωρεῶν ἔχοντες πρωτότοκοι ἀγγέλων ἄρχοντες, there are ſeven which have the chiefeſt power, the firſt-begotten princes of the Angels; where the πρωτότοκοι ἄρχοντες firſt-born princes, is ſure taken from Dan. 10. 13. where the Hebrew reads שרים הראשנים the chief princes, of which Michael is there ſaid to be one, or of the firſt. So Tobit 12. 15. Seven holy Angels, which preſent the prayers of the Saints. And there appears no reaſon why the ſeven eyes in Zachary, and here, chap. 5, 6. interpreted the ſeven ſpirits of God, ſhould not be the Angels of God; the ſame that ſtood before God, chap. 8. 2. as here they are before his throne; it being ordinary for the Officers employed by perſons to be called eyes. Theſe ſeven Spirits we find again ch. 4. 5. where, in reference to the number of the lamps on the candleſtick in the Sanctuary, they are called ſeven lamps. And they there ſeem to refer to the ſeven deacons in the Church of Jeruſalem, God being before likened to the Biſhop, and the Saints to the 24 Elders. And if it be thought ſtrange that John ſhould pray for Grace and Peace from the Angels, which here he ſeems to do from the ſeven Spirits, I anſwer, firſt, that theſe and the like words, Peace be to, or, with you, are but a form of greeting or ſalutation, which includes in it all good wiſhes of the things mentioned, but not a ſolemn prayer to thoſe perſons named in the form. This may appear by Chriſt's taking leave of his Diſciples, Joh. 14. 27. where he tells them, he leaves peace with them, and gives his peace to them, that is, he takes his leave of them, greets them at parting (and bids them not be troubled at it, nor affrighted) adding that he gives it to them, not as the world gives it, that is, he greets them heartily and affectionately, and in doing ſo, doth more than in the world is wont to be done by ſuch ſalutations. Men are wont to uſe theſe words, Peace be to you, &c. formally, and by way of civility, but oft do not wiſh it when they ſay it, and can never do any more than wiſh or pray for it; but Chriſt beſtows it by wiſhing it. Where firſt, Chriſt uſes this greeting, and yet doth not pray to his Father in doing ſo, but actually beſtows it, and ſaith he gives it them: nay the men of the world are ſaid to give it, though not as Chriſt doth. Both which note a difference betwixt ſuch ſalutations and prayers. But then ſecondly, ſuppoſing it a prayer, yet the action of prayer, being not addreſs'd to the ſeven ſpirits, whether immediately or terminatively, there can be no inconvenience from thence to define the ſpirits to be Angels. For 'tis certain that the Angels are uſed by God as inſtruments to conveigh his mercies to us (and the word Peace, as the Hebrew שלום, in ſalutations eſpecially, ſignifies all kind of mercies, all proſperity) and then thoſe mercies come from the Angels immediately, though originally from God. And accordingly Jacob in bleſſing Joſeph's ſons, having mentioned God, before whom his fathers did walk, the God which had fed him all his life, Gen. 48. 15. adds, ver. 16. the Angel which redeemed me from all evil (that is, the Angel by whom as by an inſtrument or ſervant God had done this for him, and which had ſo often appeared to him) bleſs the lads, &c. where though he prays not to the Angel but to God, yet he may, and doth pray, that God would continue to uſe the Angel's ſervice in bleſſing the lads which he had uſed in bleſſing him. And if it be farther objected, that theſe ſpirits here are named before Chriſt, and therefore muſt not be Angels; I anſwer, firſt, that the order of ſetting down is no note of dignity or priority in the Scripture. In theſe benedictions the Lord Jeſus is generally named before God the Father. And ſecondly, if the ſpirits ſhould ſignifie the various operations of the Divine providence, as ſome, or the graces of the Spirit, as others would have them ſignifie, this inconvenience will alſo hold againſt either of thoſe, that they ſhould be named before the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, and a farther inconvenience alſo, that grace ſhould be ſaid to come from graces, or from operations, or that any thing but perſons, God or Angels, ſhould have to do in conveighing grace and peace unto us. But then thirdly, the reaſon why the mention of Chriſt is left to the laſt place is evident; Firſt, becauſe the Angels being God's attendants are accordingly joined with him, not as one equal with another, but as ſervants following the Maſter. And ſecondly, becauſe there was more to be ſaid of Chriſt than the bare naming him, as appears, v. 5, 6, 7. which made it more convenient to reſerve his mention to the laſt place, in which that might moſt commodiouſly be ſpoken.

d. βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς τῷ Θεῷ — V. 6. Kings and prieſts] This phraſe βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς τῷ Θεῷ is taken out of the Jeruſalem Targum, Exod. 19. 6. There, the Hebrew reads ממלכת כהנים a kingdom of of priests, but that Targum reads מלכין וכהנין Kings and priests, and the Septuagint βασιλειον ἱεράτευμα a royal priesthood. From the Septuagint S. Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 9. reads βασιλειον ἱεράτευμα a royal priesthood, writing to the Jews of that dispersion which had the Septuagint translation in their hands, and S. John here, and ch. 5. 10. βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς Kings and Priests, in respect of those Jews again who had that Targum in their hands also. And the meaning of both the phrases is to be conceived the same, agreeing with the first notation of the Hebrew phrase, a kingdom of priests, that is a nation not going on in the ways or customs of other people, but populus alius, a several distinct people, as the Targum reads it, v. 5. consecrated, as it were, and set apart for the service of God, as the Priest's office is to wait upon God's service continually. Such were the Jews to be by God's command, and by their entring into covenant with God, Exod. 19. 6. And such must the society of Christians be now with Christ, who requires them to perform these offices of Devotion, and that in publick assemblies instituted for that turn, and not only at some few set feasts or times, but continually (morning and evening at least,) the whole Christian's life being typified by the Jews sabbath, and so the necessity lying on them to serve God truly, praise him, bless him, pray to him solemnly all the days of their lives. That we should do so was the main end of Christ's redeeming us, Lu. 1. 74. Tit. 2. 14. and in relation to that 'tis here said, that Christ washed us from our sins by his blood, and made us kings and priests to his God and father, that is, by his blood bought us to be the constant servants of God, waiting on him, and serving him (the whole Christian Church) avowedly, all the days of our life. To this sense is the place of S. Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 9. to be understood: For ver. 5. he is upon an exhortation, that they, as living stones of this holy building built on Christ a living foundation, join together into a spiritual house, an holy priesthood to offer, &c. that is to join together into a Christian assembly or Church, meeting together continually (as the Priests were wont) to serve God, and pray to him, and praise him, which God will accept of through Christ, as he did of the corporeal sacrifices of the Jews. To this he adds a testimony out of the Old Testament to enforce it, v. 6. which foretels God's purpose to gather a Church that should believe and confess him publickly (that is the meaning of not being ashamed of him, Rom. 10. 10, 11.) which testimony being applied to them (as also in another part of it, which comes in as an accessary to the former) ver. 7, 8. he comes back again, v. 9. ὑμεῖς δὲ γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, but you are a choice stock, a royal priesthood, which in all probability is, as the first verse had been, not only, (or so much) an affirmation what they were, but an exhortation what they ought to approve themselves to be; or if an affirmation, yet that in the force of an exhortation (like that in Exodus, whence 'tis taken, Ye shall be to me a kingdom of priests, that is, I command or require you to be so, or, If you will obey my voice, you shall, that is, this act of obedience I require from you; so there) ye are a choice kindred, a kingdom of priests (that is, Christ hath bought you that you should, and therefore you ought to be so) a peculiar people, set apart on purpose to this office, as it there follows, to praise and magnifie God, and declare the power of his grace, which hath wrought such a change in you. And this is most effectually done by a constant publick service of him. To the same purpose also is that other place, wherein these words are again made use of, Rev. 5. 10. where the living creatures and Elders offering up the prayers of the Saints, ver. 8. (that is, the persecuted Christians alive then, before the destruction of the Jews, approaching and drawing nigh, v. 9.) and those prayers, it seems, prophetick praises (express'd there by incense) for what they foresee Christ would speedily do for them, they sing a new song; the effect of which is, that Christ having been crucified by the Jews, slaughter'd, as other Prophets had been, should yet have the privilege beyond all them to work a notable vengeance upon those bloody men, that is, to open the seals of the book which contained all those woes in it against that people, ver. 9. and by doing so, by acting that revenge on his crucifiers, and the persecutors of Christians, it follows there in the song, that God had gathered them, (that is, the Saints that prayed) and brought them back from their dispersions and captivities, as it were, and made them kings and priests unto God, that is, a kingdom of priests, a congregation, or Church, or multitude of men daily serving God, meeting at the publick assemblies to worship and sacrifice to him: which was remarkably the effect of the Jews destruction at that time, those having been the chief persecutors of Christianity, and hindring their publick assemblies where they had power, and where they had not, yet so calumniating the Christians to the Roman Emperors and Officers, that they had for some time brought great persecution upon them, and most severe interdicts of all publick meetings. As for that which this place in the Epistles to the Churches peculiarly refers to, I suppose, it is that degree of indulgence which the Christians now had received from the Emperors in some degree, from Vespasian and others after him, according to that of Tertullian, in his Apologetick, Quales ergò leges, quas adversum nos soli exequuntur impii, injusti, turpes, truces, vani, dementes, quas Trajanus ex parte frustratus est, vetando inquiri Christianos, quas nullus Adrianus, nullus Vespasianus, quanquam Judæorum debellator, nullus Pius, nullus Verus impressit, The laws against Christians Trajan took away in part, and neither Adrian, nor Vespasian, nor Antoninus Pius, nor Antoninus Philosophus required to be executed on them. So saith Eusebius of Vespasian, μηδ' ὅλως καθ' ἡμῶν ἄτοπον ὁπωσοῦν ἐπινοήσας, he practised no cruelty against the Christians (see 2 Thess. 2. 1.) And this is there express'd, Rev. 5. 10. by we shall reign upon the earth, that is, we shall live here (instead of a state of persecution) in a royal, chearful way of liberty, to assemble and serve God publickly. And so ch. 20. 4. ἐβασίλευσε they were kings, or reigned, with Christ a thousand years, that is, enjoyed peaceable days of Christian profession. As Dan. 7. 18. The saints of the most High shall take and possess the kingdom signifies, that the Jews should be delivered from the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, (as it fell out in the time of the Maccabees) and have liberty to serve God publickly in the assemblies again. And so Rev. 20. 6. being priests unto God, and reigning a thousand years, signifies the Churches enjoying freedom and tranquility (under the Christian Princes favour) to serve God in the congregation. That these are called ἡμέραι ἀναψύξεως days of refreshing, see Act. 3. 19. This gives a ground of probable conjecture concerning the time when this intire book of Visions, put all together, was, with this Preface, sent to the Churches, viz. in those days of Vespasian, wherein (as far as concern'd the Emperors Edicts) the Church received this great tranquility, but that not perfected to them till the Jews were destroyed, at which time 'tis again repeated, Rev. 5. (see Note on ch. 17. d.) And if against all this it be objected, that these persecutions of the Christians, though for a while superseded in Vespasian's and Titus's times, yet soon returned again in Domitian's, and in some degree in Trajan's, and soon after were very frequent in great violence, so as to fill up the number of the Ten persecutions within 270 years after Christ: To this I shall answer in the words of Eusebius Eccl. hist. l. 8. c. 1. speaking of the times immediately before Diocletian the last persecutor, To shew, saith he, what glory and liberty the Christian doctrine had obtained among all men, both Greeks and Barbarians, before the persecution of Diocletian, requires too great a work for me to perform. This, saith he, appears by the good will of the Emperors, and the great favour of their officers to whom they intrusted the governing of countrys, who have granted the Christians liberty and security, permitted them in their palaces, and in their sight, them and their whole families, &c. Who, saith he, can recount the multitudes of assemblies in every city? who can describe the confluxes to the Oratories, and the spacious Churches which they built from the foundation, not contenting themselves with the antient edifices? These, saith he, no envy could suppress, no evil spirit bewitch, nor man hinder, as long as Christians lived worthy of God's protection. But when the lives of Christians degenerated through too much liberty into softness and sloth, and Christians hated and reproached one another, and with those weapons of the tongue invaded and fought with one another, when Bishops set upon Bishops, and people raised seditions against people, when hypocrisy and shews of piety fill'd all places, then by little little and little the judgments of God, as they are wont, began to visit us: and when we used no means to appease God, but multiplied sin upon sin, as if God did not respect or consider our sins, and so there was nothing left among Christians but contentions, emulations, hatred, enmity, ambition, Tyranny, &c. then God, as he said by Jeremy, made the daughter of Sion dark, and cast down the glory of Israel, and remembred not his footstool in the day of his wrath, &c. and all this, saith he, was fulfill'd upon us; Churches pull'd down, Bibles burnt, Bishops of the Church contumeliously used, &c. Of which all that I have to say, is to justifie the righteous judgment of God: and so he proceeds to set down the words of the Emperors edict against the Christians, chap. 3. In which words is contained a full answer to this objection; For God's promises being but conditional, and the mercies contained in them no longer ascertained to us than that condition is perform'd by us, this tranquility and peaceable enjoyment of assemblies, which is here promised, and afterwards oft repeated, cannot be expected to continue any longer than Christians walk worthy of it; and when they do not, the greater the blessing is, the fitter is it to be withdrawn from them; the discipline which is provided for Christians being a delivering up to Satan, when they offend against the Christian rule, that so they may be taught amendment. But beside this, other uses there are of the frequent returns of persecutions, to teach them vigilance, and make trial of their Christian fortitude, and to give them occasion to practise all other Christian duties, of patience and meekness, and so make their light shine before men, which would otherwise be more dim. And in this matter it is observable, that as Christ's promise of the greatest temporal felicities, the richest harvest, the hundred-fold more in this life, hath the mixture of θλίψεις persecutions joyned with it, so this promise of being Kings and Priests unto God had its mixtures also. When the Jews were destroyed by Titus, and so the Christians persecutions ceased under Vespasian and Titus, yet in Adrian's time the Jews under Barchocheba raise a sedition again, and lie very heavy upon the Christians, because they would not rise and join with them, (see ch. 11. 7.) and so there were some gleanings of evils still behind from the Jews after this signal cessation here spoken of. And when the Jewish malice was at an end, then the heathen Emperors are stirred up by the Devil, Magicians and Oracles, to persecute the Christians; and so it often fared with them till Constantine's time, that is, till the Roman Emperor was converted to the faith; and then the promise is, c. 20. that for the space of a thousand years they shall live and reign with Christ, that is, that for that space Christian religion shall be no more interdicted or persecuted: and that promise was perfectly performed. And so still the objection is of no force against the truth of this promise thus interpreted. This hath been here thus largely said once for all, to clear the many passages of this nature which are to be met with in these Visions, and in other parts of these Books.

V. 7. Cometh with clouds] That Christ's coming denotes this middle coming of Christ in vengeance on his enemies, and for the rescue of his constant servants, this especially now approaching in the destruction of the Jews, hath been shewed, Mat. 24. Note b. And that the addition of μ. νεφελῶν the clouds, with which he comes, is not an argument against this sense, may appear by the cloud in the wilderness, which signified God's presence to defend the Israelites, and the cloud on the Tabernacle, which noted God's special presence there, and by the Psalmist calling the clouds his chariot, the ordinary way wherein God exhibits himself present to men, to protect, or to punish, (and not only at the day of the final doom) and by Isa. 4. 5. where the cloud upon mount Sion is the defence in the end of the verse, and by the very same phrase, Dan. 7. 13. the Son of man coming with the clouds of heaven, when dominion, glory, and a kingdom are given unto him, v. 14. (which is not by any pretended to belong to the day of doom, but to Christ's kingdom here in, though not of this world) and by the same phrase repeated, Mat. 24. 30. the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory (which yet was to be within the compass of that generation, ver. 34.) and so Luk. 21. 27. And so among the heathen we have the like phrase; as when God is said by Homer to come to Diomedes, Iliad. l. 5.

having his shoulders wrap'd in a cloud, and that there on purpose to defend him. And in Virgil, when Jupiter came to assist Æneas, Æn. 7. it is said of him, that ——radiis ardentem lucis & auro v. 142.

Ipse manu quatiens ostendit ab æthere nubem,
He shewed a cloud from heaven burning with rays of light and gold. By all which appears how properly is signified by this phrase Christ's protecting his constant servants, as well as punishing his enemies, which are two special acts of his Regal power, to which he is installed by his Resurrection.

V. 15. Fine brass] That χαλκολίβανον should be rendred fine brass, will be liable to this exception, that 'tis against analogy that the former part of the word, χαλκο, should be set to denote the thing it self, which must rather denote some attribute of, or ingredient in the thing spoken of; as χαλκέντερον sure is one that hath entrails of brass, not brass that hath entrails, and χαλκοχίτωνες they that have coats of brass (armour) not brass that hath coats; so χαλκόμυια is not brass like a flie, but a kind of flie, whether in colour or something else, having a resemblance of brass. And so in all other the compounds, the latter part of the word noting the thing or person, the former some attribute of it. That interpretation of Andreas Cæsareensis seems more reasonable, who after the former (and one more for brass that is digged out of mount Lebanon) gives a third notion of the word, that 'tis χαλκοειδὴς λίβανος, ὃν ἐκ λέβητων παῖδες ἄῤῥενα καθέσιν, ὑγιάδες, πυρὶ ὁμιλήσῃ, ἀτμὸς ἀποπέμπουσα, Amber that looks like brass, which Physicians call the male-amber, which coming near the fire sends out a perfume. Of this Dioscorides speaks thus, Πρωΐδιός ἐστ ἄῤῥην καλούμενος σταγονίας, the male is more excellent called Stagonias. And of this doth Suidas farther speak, χαλκολίβανον, εἶδος ἠλέκτρου, τιμιώτερον χρυσοῦ· ἔστι δὲ τὸ ἤλεκτρον ἀλλότυπον χρυσίον μεμιγμένον ὕελῳ καὶ λιθείᾳ, ὁποίας δεῖ σωθέσεως ἡ ἁγία τράπεζα τ μεγάλης ἐκκλησίας, It is a sort of amber more valuable than gold. Now this amber is mix'd with glass and stone, of which mixture is the Communion-Table of the great Church. Thus Ezech. 1. 27. I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire, round about within it: where as the appearance of fire and the colour of amber are of the same importance, so here his feet that are said to be like amber, are in the next words again expres's'd, ὡς ἐν καμίνῳ πεπυρωμένοι, as it were set on fire in a furnace. This Amber being of all things nearest the colour of fire, and not of the flame of fire, for to that before his eyes were compared: which two being joined with his head and hair, white as a fleece, make up the representation complete. For as in a great flaming fire, the lower part, the fire it self, looks like Amber, then the flame being higher than the fire, differs in colour from that, but the top of the flame looks perfectly white: so 'tis here, the head and the hair are white (being the uppermost part) the eyes or countenance, as an ordinary flame, but the feet, or lower part, of the colour of amber. All together making up a fiery flaming appearance, (see ch. 9. Note f.) to represent the gloriousness of this coming of Christ to judgment upon his enemies, as he doth in the subsequent Visions. After the same manner God sitting in judgment is represented Dan. 7. 9. he himself, his head, hair, and garments, white as snow or wool, then under that, the throne like a flame of fire, and under that the wheels as burning fire.

V. 19. The things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and —] The phrase καὶ ἃ εἰσι, καὶ ἃ μέλλει γίνεσθαι, may possibly be rendred, and which are, and which shall come to pass: and if it be so, then it must denote these two other sorts of things, the one then present, and the other future, over and above what he had now seen, v. 13. (which was only the laying of the scene, and the title as it were and breviate of the ensuing Visions of the seven Churches, his care of them, and his severity to all that provoke him to it.) But 'tis much more probable that the first καὶ should be rendred both, thus, Write the things which thou hast seen, viz. the seven lamps, v. 13. and seven stars, &c. v. 16. (of which 'tis here added, v. 20. ἃ εἶδες, which thou hast seen, where the εἶδες, thou hast seen, belongs to this, not to any former Visions) both which are, and which shall come to pass after them, noting this Vision (if it belong only to that) to describe both both the preſent and future eſtate of thoſe Churches; but if it extend farther to the reſt of the prophecy, then noting the ſubſequent Viſions to contain theſe two heads of matter, the preſent and future dealings of Chriſt with his Church, permitting them for their trial to ſuffer a while, but at length upon their perſeverance rewarding them. Of both theſe it will then be here ſaid, γράψον ἃ εἶδες, write the things which thou haſt ſeen, of both theſe ſorts, ſome the repreſentation of preſent events, the preſent eſtate of Chriſtianity, and then others the repreſentation of what ſhould for the future come to paſs; in both which Chriſt's care of his faithful ſervants, and puniſhing of his enemies, and of all that fall off from him, will be diſcernible. In the expounding theſe words Mr. Br. hath made uſe of a ſpecial ſubtilty, and on that (as he * confeſſes) built his enſuing interpretations. For having rightly concluded from the plain words, that the ἃ εἶδες, the things which thou haſt ſeen, are tam res futuræ quàm præſentes, things future as well as preſent, he interprets that thus, that every one of thoſe ſeven Churches ſignifies two things, one literally, then preſent (of which, being the only true, he hath generally little to ſay) and another by way of antitype in that prophetically contained (as the Church of Epheſus, beſide that which literally it ſignifies, muſt be the whole primitive Church from the Apoſtles to Conſtantine, and the like) and by that means hath obtained a liberty of phanſying whatſoever he will, though never ſo diſtant, and affixing it as the antitype, or ſecond interpretation of thoſe Viſions of the ſeven Churches. The falſneſs of which proceſs is farther viſible from the very words on which he lays all his weight (confeſſing the obſervation of that little thing to have been his key to the whole interpretation.) For if, as he would have it, the thing there affirmed were, that the ſame things were both preſent and future, the phraſe muſt then be ἃ καὶ εἰσὶ καὶ μέλλει γίνεσθαι, which both are and ſhall be, whereas the phraſe is quite otherwiſe, the things which thou haſt ſeen, καὶ ἃ εἰσὶ καὶ ἃ μέλλει, both which are and which ſhall be, or poſſibly, and which are, &c. which clearly is a diſtribution of the Viſions in reſpect of the matter of them, into two ſorts; one, the matter of which was then preſent, the other, the matter of which was to come to paſs not long after; and no way a diſtribution of their completions, that theſe Viſions were to be doubly fulfilled, once at that preſent, a ſecond time 1600 years after. The groſneſs of this deceit was here to be diſplayed, as being the one (groundleſs) ſupport of the whole enſuing interpretation, which all preſently vaniſheth (as far as concerns this ſecond completion) without any farther confutation.

h. Ἄγγελοι

V. 20. Angels] Ἄγγελοι here are, no queſtion, the governours of theſe ſeven Churches, ἐπὶ τὰ ἐκκλησίαις ἱσάειθμοι ἔφορεσι Ἄγγελοι, ſaith Andr. Cæſareenſ. ſo many overſeers for ſo many Churches, ſo many ſingular perſons to rule, one in each of them; thus called, as the officers and miniſters of Chriſt (aſcending, as it were, and deſcending on Jacob's ladder between God and them) in ruling them, delivering God's meſſages to them, and alſo returning their meſſages or prayers to God. Thus in a Saxon MS. Biſcopaſ ſýndon ȝoðeſ býðelaſ, Biſhops are God's bydels, that is, meſſengers or officers. See Sir Henry Spelman's Gloſſary in the word Bedellus. This title was given to the chief prieſt in the Old Teſtament, particularly in Malachy, For he is the Angel or meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts, whoſe lips therefore were to preſerve knowledge, and from thence, as from the oracle, the people were to require the Law, to receive knowledge and direction for their duty. Theſe Angels are by antient writers known and affirmed to be Biſhops, one in every of thoſe Sees, (and not only ſo, but Metropolitans, to whom the Biſhops of the adjacent cities were ſubordinate: ſee Note b.) And this courſe of government is here owned and approved by Chriſt himſelf, by his ſending thoſe meſſages to thoſe Angles in theſe Churches, and by his holding the ſtars, which reſemble them in his right hand, v. 10. and ch. 2. 1. whilſt he viſits, or walks, in the midſt of the Candleſticks or Churches. As for Mr. Brightman's only argument to the contrary, becauſe there is mention of many Biſhops or Elders of Epheſus, Act. 20. 17, 28. that is eaſily anſwered, that the Biſhops of Aſia were the men underſtood in that place, who met Paul at Miletus; but that they are Epiſcopi Epheſi, Biſhops of Epheſus, is a direct falſification of his, there being no ſuch phraſe uſed in that place. And for that one objection which by ſome is drawn againſt their being ſingle perſons, becauſe ch. 2. 24. after ſpeaking to the Angel of Thyatira it is ſaid, ὑμῖν δὲ καὶ λοιποῖς τοῖς ἐν Θυατείροις, but to you and the reſt that are in Thyatira, as if the Angel before were the ὑμᾶς you here, the anſwer will be eaſie, if it be obſerved, that in the antient Greek MSS. particularly that at S. James's, the καὶ is left out, and the words read, ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω τοῖς λοιποῖς ἐν Θυατείροις, to you the reſt, or, to the reſt of you that are in Thyatira, and who have not known the depths, as they call them, but thoſe depths of Satan, &c. Where the ὑμῖν τοῖς λοιποῖς, you the reſt, or the reſt of you, is ſet in oppoſition to the Gnoſtick complying party among them, before-mentioned, and belongs not to the Angel or Biſhop, but as one and the prime of that pure, conſtant party. I need add no more for anſwer to this ſo ſlight an objection. Theſe Angels are here deſcribed by the hieroglyphick of ſtars, ἀστέρες in token of their office to illuminate, and ſend out influences to rule the faithful under them, as the Sun and the reſt of the ſtars do this inferiour world; and the Churches where they preſide are called λυχνίαι ſockets for lamps, or candleſticks, as being the places where theſe ſtars, as ſo many lamps or torches, do ſhine, where they are ſet or faſtned, to give light to all that come into the room. Now becauſe theſe Angels are ſo conſiderable parts in the Churches, therefore it is that the meſſages which are ſent to the whole congregation of Chriſtian profeſſors under them are here addreſs'd particularly to the Angels, c. 2. 1. And ſo in the reſt, where though the Angels were ſingle perſons, yet what is ſaid to them is not ſaid only to their perſons, but to the univerſality of the people under them, whoſe non-proficiency, or remiſſion of degrees of Chriſtian vertue, eſpecially their falling off from the conſtancy and courage of their profeſſion, do deſerve (and are accordingly threatned with) the removal of that Chriſtian knowledge, that grace, thoſe privileges of a Church which had been allowed them, c. 2. 5. which is not ſo properly appliable as a puniſhment of the Biſhop, as of the people under him. And therefore in the Paraphraſe I have generally changed the Singular into the Plural number, by that means to leave it indifferently to the Biſhop of each Church and the people under him, and yet farther to the other Churches ſubordinate to each of the Metropoles here named. (Of the word Ἄγγελος ſee more Note on Act. 12. e.)

Paraphraſe. CHAP. II.

1. To the Biſhop and, with him, the Church of Epheſus deliver this meſſage, Thus ſaith Chriſt, (deſcribed c. 1. 13, and 16.) ſuſtaining and honouring with his right hand the ſeven Governours or Biſhops of the ſeven Churches, and coming now to viſit and examine, and (according to deſert) to puniſh or reward the members of theſe Churches, and to admoniſh them timely what may be mended in them;

1. UNto the Angel of the Church of Epheſus write, Theſe things ſaith he that holdeth the ſeven Stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midſt of the ſeven golden Candleſticks;]

a. 2. I obſerve and approve your labour and great induſtry in the Goſpel, and your moſt conſtant patience and perſeverance in the faith, your no kind of compliance with the vitious men that creep in among you: Ye have put the falſe teachers to the teſt, examined their doctrine and miſſion (ſee Note on Joh. 20. b.) and found them to be counterfeits.

2. I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canſt not bear them which are evil: and thou haſt tryed them which [a] ſay they are Apoſtles and are not, and haſt found them liars;]

3. And you have formerly undergone many preſſures

3. And haſt born, and haſt patience, and for my names ſake haſt * laboured, and haſt not fainted.]

* undergone hard labour, or toiled κεκοπίακας

and

and perſecutions, and held out againſt all aſſaults of terror or difficulty, and for the profeſſion of Chriſtianity have endured very ſore and ſharp afflictions, and were not then diſheartned in your courſe by perſecutions in the way.

† I have againſt thee that thou haſt remitted ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ, ὅτι

4. Nevertheleſs † I have ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou [b] haſt left thy firſt love.] 4. But one charge or accuſation (ſee Mat. 5. 23.) I have againſt you of this Church, that that vehement, pure, Chriſtian love, (caſting out all fear of danger) which at firſt was in you, and evidenced it ſelf by your confeſſion of the faith with courage, and without fear, you ſince have ſomewhat remitted, and are not altogether ſo fervent, and intenſe, and valiant, as at the firſt you were.

5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the firſt works; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candleſtick out of its place, except thou repent.] 5. Call to mind therefore that degree of Chriſtian zeal and courage which was in you at the firſt, and being ſenſible of the decay, return to it again, and act as Chriſtianly and valiantly in all things as at firſt you did, or elſe I will ſuddenly puniſh you by removing the light of the Goſpel from you, by leaving no Church among you.

6. But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the [c] deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I alſo hate.] 6. Yet one thing is to be ſaid in your commendation, that the temptations of the Gnoſticks being of two ſorts, the baits of luſts, as well as the terrors of worldly ſufferings, though you have been wrought on by the latter of theſe, yet for the former you are free, you deteſt thoſe abominable villanies of luſt, which come from the Nicolaitans, and are gotten into other Churches, v. 15. and 20.

7. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God.] 7. Let this warning of mine in this viſion be laid to heart by the Chriſtians of Epheſus, and all that are under that metropolis, for it is of near concernment to all: And as it brings terrors to all who ſhall be involved in the ſin mentioned, ſo every one that ſhall hold out, and overcome the temptations, he ſhall have deliverance here, and hereafter eternal life beſtowed upon him; which is the meaning of eating of the tree of life, Gen. 2. 22. and may be encouragement and reward ſufficient to thoſe that ſhall lay down their lives for Chriſt, and ſo here is fitly mention'd to thoſe who would not confeſs Chriſt in time of perſecution.

8. And unto the Angel of the [d] Church in Smyrna write, Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead and is alive;] 8. Another meſſage deliver to the Biſhop of Smyrna, another metropolis of Aſia, in theſe words, Thus ſaith Chriſt, the eternal God, that was ſo deſpiſed and contemned by men, who was put to death, but roſe from the dead (ſee c. 1. 11.) and ſo is fit to encourage you in your patience, and ſure to reward you, whatſoever it coſt you, though it be the loſs of life and all;

* contumely βλασφημίαν

9. I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich; and I know the * blaſphemy of them that [e] ſay they are Jews, and are not, but are the Synagogue of Satan.] 9. Your works have been very pious and Chriſtian, your diligence remarkable, and great perſecution and poverty you have ſuffered (but this very thing tends to the encreaſing of your wealth treaſured up for you, and your contentedneſs is at the preſent all riches) and you have been tempted by the contumelies and reproaches and railings caſt upon you by the Gnoſticks, who are a ſort of men that take upon them to be Jews, to avoid perſecutions from them, but indeed are not, live not according to the Law, Gal. 6. 13. that profeſs to dive into the ſecrets and myſteries of the Old Teſtament (for the underſtanding of which they call themſelves Gnoſticks) and from thence to fetch great ſecrets, which are all nothing but helliſh abominations, and their practices conſequent to them meerly diabolical, accuſing, calumniating, and perſecuting the Orthodox Chriſtians. And therefore if they are of any ſociety, or ſynagogue, any religion, 'tis not that of Moſes (from God,) but of the devils inſtitution. Theſe I know have reproached and railed at you, and ye have ſuffered much from them.

10. Fear none of thoſe things which thou † ſhalt ſuffer: behold, the devil ſhall [f] caſt ſome of you into priſon, that ye may be * tried, and ye ſhall have tribulation ten days. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.] 10. Take courage againſt all poſſible dangers, remembring me, as I have repreſented my ſelf to you, v. 8. And now I tell you before-hand, that your conſtancy to the faith muſt in reaſon be expected to raiſe you up enemies, both at this preſent the Jewiſh zelots for the Synagogue, v. 9. (incenſed againſt you by the Gnoſticks) and afterwards the Roman officers, aſſertors of the diabolical Idol-worſhip againſt Chriſtianity, and theſe latter ſhall apprehend and impriſon ſome of you, being permitted by God to do ſo, on purpoſe for the farther tryal of your conſtancy. And this perſecution, which ſhall come upon you when the Jews are deſtroyed (in the time of Marcus Aurelius and Verus, under which Polycarp the Biſhop of this Church ſhall ſuffer death) ſhall then laſt for a little while: and all this ſhall prove a foundation of greater glory to you, and help them to the reward and crown of Martyrdom which ſuffer in it, and that is all the hurt which your conſtancy ſhall bring you.

11. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches. [He that overcometh ſhall not be * hurt of the ſecond death.] 11. They that hold out to the end, that perſevere in deſpight of all theſe temptations, ſhall continue a proſperous flouriſhing Church, ſhall not have their Candleſtick removed from them, as all they ſhall that by the ſharpneſs of perſecutions are ſcandalized and fall off from Chriſt (ſee Note on c. 20. d.)

12. And to the Angel of the Church in [g] Pergamos write, [Theſe things ſaith he who hath the ſharp ſword with two edges;] 12. This is the meſſage of Chriſt to you, who looketh upon you as a judge, and ſeeth ſomewhat in you which ſhall be puniſhed moſt ſeverely if you repent and reform not ſpeedily;

13. I know thy works, and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satans [h] ſeat is: and thou holdeſt faſt my name, and haſt not denied my faith, even in thoſe days wherein [i] Antipas was my faithful Martyr, who was ſlain among you, where Satan dwelleth.] 13. I cannot but commend your Chriſtian behaviour and conſtancy, and that the greater, being conſidered with the circumſtances of the place of your abode, in the midſt of ſuch temptations to the contrary, and of the times approaching, wherein Antipas, for his fidelity and courage in preaching the Goſpel, will be (I foreſee) cruelly martyr'd, and where the inſtant malices of the adverſary might poſſibly have terrified you.

* ſcandal, or ſnare σκάνδαλον

14. But I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to caſt a * ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.] 14. But yet for all this courage, great faults there are among you, though the whole Church be not guilty of them, viz. the doctrines and practices of the Gnoſticks are gotten in among you, which are but a tranſcript, as it were, of that famous counſel of Balaam to Balac, which brought that curſe and ruin upon the Iſraelites, when nothing elſe could do it, conſiſting in joining and complying with the Idolaters (ſee Note b.) and committing all abominable uncleanneſs (ſee Jude f.)

15. So haſt thou alſo them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate.] 15. In like manner there is gotten in among you, and permitted, or not puniſhed by your Biſhops, that unclean doctrine and practice of the Nicolaitans (ſee Note c.) which being moſt odious to me, ought moſt ſharply to have been puniſhed by them.

16. Repent; or elſe I will come unto thee quickly, and fight againſt them with the ſword of my mouth.] 16. And if this lenity be not ſpeedily mended, I will viſit and deſtroy you ſuddenly by judgments parallel to the ſword that fell on thoſe Iſraelites that were corrupted by Balaams counſel, Num. 25. 5.

17. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches, To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the [k] hidden Manna; and I will give him a [l] white ſtone, and † in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth ſaving he that receiveth it.] 17. And for all thoſe that keep themſelves pure and ſpotleſs from theſe temptations, this compliance and uncleanneſs, let them know that the joys and comforts that come in to them by the practice of the contrary Chriſtian vertues of courage and purity, are, though inviſible, yet far greater than thoſe which theſe carnal Goſpellers enjoy, 1 Cor. 2. 9. and beſides this portion of inward bliſs (adherent to the practice of duty at the preſent) prepared for them by God, and ſhow'r'd down like Manna upon their ſouls, they ſhall over and above (as victors have a ticket given them by the judges, to receive the reward that belongs to them, the value or quality whereof, and their names, is written in that ticket) have a token or ticket given them, with the name of Chriſt written on it, ſignifying the Chriſtian reward of grace and glory, but that ſuch as is not to be conceived what or how valuable it is, but by the enjoying of it.

† amber, Note on ch. 1. d. * adminiſtration διακονίαν † or thy laſt works more than the firſt, for the King's MS. reads τὰ ἔργα σου τὰ ἔσχατα

18. And unto the Angel of the Church in [m] Thyatira, write, Theſe things ſaith [the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like † fine braſs.] 18. Chriſt, that appeared to thee ſo gloriouſly c. 1. 15. in token of the judicature which he means to exerciſe, the rewards and puniſhments which he hath in his diſpenſing.

19. I know thy works and charity, and † ſervice and faith, and thy patience, and † thy works; and the laſt to be more than the firſt.] 19. I take notice of your Chriſtian actions, and courage in confeſſing of Chriſt (ſee Note b.) and your charity or liberality to the poor brethren, and your conſtancy againſt all terrors; and all theſe Chriſtian actions daily improving, and growing greater and more abundant in you.

n. 20. Yet one quarrel I have againſt you, that you permit that hereſie of the Gnoſticks that take upon them to underſtand myſteries beyond all others, to delude ſome members of your Church, and infuſe their falſe doctrines into them, and among others, thoſe foremention'd v. 14. of filthineſs, and communicating in Idol-worſhips.

20. Notwithſtanding I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou ſuffereſt that woman n Jezebel, * which calleth her ſelf a propheteſs, to teach, and to ſeduce my ſervants to commit fornication, and to eat things ſacrificed unto Idols.]

* or, which calling her ſelf a propheteſs doth teach and deceive, for the King's MS. reads ἡ λέγουσα ἑαυτὴν προφῆτιν, καὶ διδάσκῃ καὶ πλανᾷ

21. And theſe filthy hereticks have not made uſe of the warning by me given them to repent, but ſtill go on in their impieties.

21. And I gave her ſpace to repent of her fornications, and ſhe repented not.]

22. And therefore you may expect that the judgments that ſhall ſuddenly fall upon them, and all that join with them, ſhall be very heavy, if not prevented by their ſpeedy reformation.

22. Behold, † I will caſt her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her, into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.]

† I caſt her into priſon, for the K.'s MS. reads βάλλω αὐτὴν εἰς φυλακὴν

23. And all that are either leaders or followers in this impiety, ſhall be deſtroyed, to be an example to all the Chriſtian Churches in the reſt of Aſia, that theſe doctrines and practices may be avoided by them, upon ſight of my ſevere viſitation upon theſe; which may aſſure you all, (you Churches of Aſia) that according as you behave your ſelves, ſo you may expect to be rewarded by me.

23. And I will kill her children with death, and all the Churches ſhall know that I am he which ſearcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.]

24,25. But to the reſt of you, thoſe of Thyatira which are not thus guilty, which have not given ear to theſe ſecret depths of Gnoſtick villany, to you this acknowledgment and commendation is due, that you are ſuch, that God requires nothing more of you but perſeverance, that you hold out untouch'd and untainted, till this judgment comes upon thoſe wicked that are now among you, and till I come to reward your fidelity and conſtancy.

24. But unto * you, I ſay, and to the reſt in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they ſpeak, I will put upon you none other burthen.

25. But that which ye have already, hold faſt † till I come.]

* you I ſay the reſt for the King's MS. reads ὑμῖν δὲ λέγω λοιποῖς

† until the time when I ſhall come, ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἥξω

o. 26, 27, 28. And they that thus perſevere in the performance of all Chriſtian duties, pure and ſpotleſs from all theſe abominable heretical mixtures, they that hold out againſt all perſecutions and temptations, firm and ſpotleſs, ſhall, when the days of perſecution are over, be made uſe of to propagate the Goſpel to the Nations, convert the Gentile idolaters to the faith, and become Biſhops of other Churches. And this they ſhall do ſucceſsfully and efficaciouſly over the Eaſtern Nations.

26. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto o the end, to him will I give power over the Nations,

27. (And he ſhall * rule them with a rod of iron, † and as the veſſels of a potter ſhall they be broken to ſhivers) * even as I received of my Father:

Annotations on Chap. II.

a. Φάσκοντες εἶναι Ἀποστόλους

V. 2. Say they are Apoſtles] Who theſe Pſeud-Apoſtles were that this Church of Epheſus had tried and found liars, may perhaps be reaſonably affirmed out of the ſtories of thoſe times. Gaius in Euſebius, l. 3. c. κη'. ſets down the ſtory of Cerinthus the leader of an hereſie, that he pretended Revelations, written ὡς ὑπὸ Ἀποστόλου μεμαθὼν, by ſome great Apoſtle, and related τερατολογίας prodigious narrations, ὡς δι' Ἀγγέλων αὐτῷ δεδειγμένας, as ſhewed him by Angels, and then delivered his doctrines of a temporal kingdom of Chriſt after the Reſurrection, and that men ſhould in Jeruſalem live again, and δουλεύειν ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ ἡδοναῖς, ſerve luſts and pleaſures, and ſpend the ſpace of a thouſand years ἐν γάμῳ ἑορτῆς, as in a nuptial feſtivity. The ſame doth Dioniſius Alexandrinus in his ſecond book περὶ ἐπαγγελιῶν, ſet down, ſpeaking of Cerinthus and his followers and their doctrine, ἐπίγειον εἶναι τὴν τοῦ Χριστοῦ βασιλείαν, that Chriſt's kingdom ſhould be an earthly one, and (agreeable to his fanſie who was φιλοσώματος καὶ πάνυ σαρκικὸς, a very carnal man and lover of the body) that it ſhould conſiſt in the ſatisfying of the panch and luſt, σιτίοις, πότοις καὶ γάμοις, in meats, drinks and marriages, and to that purpoſe (that there might be the more plenty of theſe) ἑορταῖς, καὶ θυσίαις, καὶ ἱερείων σφαγαῖς, in feaſts, and ſacrifices, and killing of beaſts or victims. And Irenæus, lib. 1. goes farther, mentioning ſome ἀπορρητότερα δόγματα, doctrines of filthineſs not fit to be named, which he taught his diſciples. And this, it ſeems, in Aſia, and 'tis very probable in Epheſus it ſelf, of which we now ſpeak. For that John after his return from baniſhment lived there, we find affirmed by Clemens in his narration of him tranſcribed by Euſebius, Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. κγ'. And that he going into a Bath on a time, and finding Cerinthus to be there, leaped back, and went out, not enduring to be under the ſame roof with him, for fear, as he ſaid, that it ſhould fall, when ſuch an enemy of Chriſtianity as Cerinthus was in it, is the affirmation of Irenæus, l. 3. out of a tradidition of Polycarp: ſee Euſeb. l. 3. c. κε'. And two circumſtances more to our preſent purpoſe will be obſervable in that Author: Firſt, that the Nicolaitans here mentioned to be hated by this Church, v. 6. did riſe immediately after Cerinthus and his followers, (ὀπαδοὶ τούτων ὄντες, ſaith Euſebius) and are therefore ſet down immediately after them in the courſe of his Hiſtory, c. κθ'. Secondly, that Dionyſius Alexandrinus comes to take him in, in his diſcourſe on occaſion of this very book, the Revelation, περὶ τῆς Ἰωάννου Ἀποκαλύψεως εἰ πάντων τινὰ οἶς ἐν τῇ ἀνείληφεν θεολό-

γος, ſaith * Euſebius, having expounded ſome parts of the Revelation out of an antient tradition. Whether this were the place of the Revelation which he ſo expounded, I cannot affirm; but of this I am ſure, that he and his followers, pretending to have received their Revelations from ſome prime Apoſtle, and affirming the prodigies he ſpake of to be ſhewed him by Angels, may well be ſaid to ſay they are Apoſtles (that is, to have commiſſion from heaven for their doctrines) when aſſuredly they were not ſuch. And that the Church of Epheſus was not deceived by him, but found out and rejected his errors, appears by S. John avoiding him in that place, as one that was ſo known an enemy of the truth, that he ſpeaks to all that were with him, φεύγωμεν, &c. Let us not come near this vile perſon; which is an interpretation of the οὐ δυνῆ βαστάσαι κακούς here in this verſe, their not enduring theſe vile carnal Goſpellers, but ſeparating from them.

b. ἀφῆκας τὴν πρώτην ἀγάπην

V. 4. Haſt left thy firſt love] The phraſe ἀφῆκας τὴν πρώτην ἀγάπην is to be rendred, thou haſt remitted, or abated, thy firſt love; for ſo ἀφιέναι ſignifies (being applied to things of this nature) remiſſion of degrees of any thing, as that is contrary to intenſion of them. Mr. Brightman's fanſie on the word is very obſervable (and from thence it will be eaſie to judge of the ſolidity of the grounds on which he proceeds in his interpretations) * Every one of the Churches, ſaith he, hath ſuch a name given it as will declare its whole condition; as it were by marks written in the forehead. Thus, ſaith he, ἀφῆκας, thou haſt remitted, doth ſufficiently teach what the † Spirit conſidered in this city, viz. that 'twas Epheſus, as it were ἄφεσις, omiſſion, &c. from whence he preſently gathers that by Epheſus is meant the whole Primitive Church till Conſtantine's days. Thus pitifully ſlight are the marks and characters by which he paſſeth his judgment, and on which he founds his interpretations. For beſides that Epheſus is the name of a city and Church known in the Scripture, and doth as punctually ſignifie that, and nothing but that, as London ſignifies London, (and it may be as reaſonable to ſay that the Epiſtle of Paul to the Epheſians had a particular aſpect on the whole Church till Conſtantine, as that this part of S. John's Epiſtle to the Angel of the Church of Epheſus belongs to it) the alluſion of aphecas, (for that is the word, ἀφῆκας) to Epheſus, is as remote in

* Perſpicuum eſt conſultò deleginſſe ſpiritum has Eccleſias, quæ vel ipſis nominibus tanquam inſcriptis quibuſdam in fronte notis totam ſuam conditionem indicarent, p. 20.

in ſound as one could well imagine; but then in ſignification much more, ἄφεσις ſignifying deſire, or appetite, but ἄφεσις remiſſion or looſing. Now for the other part of this phraſe, πρώτην ἀγάπην, 'tis here not the love or care of the Biſhop toward the flock, as Mr. Brightman would have it, but the great love toward Chriſt, which firſt was in them (not their firſt love as that ſignifies the object of it, Chriſt; for the leaving or utter forſaking of him were not reconcilable with the other commendations which are here given of them, particularly, the ὑπομονὴν ἔχεις, thou haſt patience, at the preſent, thou preſerveſt ſtill in the the Chriſtian faith: but it is) their firſt zeal and fervency of love toward Chriſt (ſee Mat. 24. 12.) which it ſeems was in proceſs of time much remitted in the Chriſtians of that Church. This love, when it is perfect, caſteth out fear; he that hath it, will make no ſcruple to die, or undergo any danger for Chriſt: And thus had this Church formerly behaved themſelves toward Chriſt, κεκοπίακες καὶ οὐκ ἐκάμνησες, v. 3. they had endured, and paſs'd through difficulties, and not fainted. But now it ſeems they were fallen into a great and dangerous remiſſneſs in this particular; of which therefore if they repent not, they are threatned with removal of their Candleſtick. What this remiſſneſs was, may perhaps be gueſs'd by what we ſee propheſied of by Chriſt, Mat. 24. 12. and by what we find affirmed of the Gnoſticks (and among them of a famous leader, Baſilides) who, we know by S. Paul's Epiſtles, had crept at that time into the Churches, particularly into that of Epheſus. Now of their many doctrines and opinions, this one is by Euſebius (and before him by Origen l. 6. contra Celſ.) diſtinctly mentioned l. 4. c. ζ'. ἀδιαφορεῖν εἰδωλοθύτων ἀποδομένους καὶ ἀπομυομένους ἀσεβείας φυλάξεως ἕνεκεν πίστιν, καὶ πού τοι διωγμῶν καιρὸς, that it was an indifferent thing, and no ſin to eat things offered to Idols, and confidently to abjure the faith in times of perſecution. This is clearly though ſarcaſtically, ſet down by * Lucian, or whoſoever was the writer of Philopatris, ſcoffing at the Chriſtians of his time, under the perſecutor Trajan, in that Dialogue. There Triephon, that goes for the Chriſtian, firſt endeavours to convert Critias to his religion: and as in that Dialogue it appears that the Chriſtians talk'd much of the approach of * ruin to the Roman Army and greatneſs (which might make Triephon ſo well pleaſed with his profeſſion, and ſo forward to invite others to it, as to a party that would ſoon be very proſperous) ſo at length in the cloſe of the Dialogue, when Cleolaus brings them news of the Romans good ſucceſſes in Perſia, and Aſſyria, and Ægypt, and Scythia, which fell out about the fifteenth of Trajan, then Triephon would ſpeak no more of Chriſtianity, but, as an Apoſtate or deſertor, betakes himſelf to the * unknown God at Athens, and joins with Critias in that worſhip, as that which was likely to yield him moſt ſafety, and then laughs at the Chriſtians, and gives them leave to ſay what they pleaſe, flatter themſelves with their imaginary hopes; but ὁ φεύγις Ἱπποκλείδην, in the Proverbial ſpeech, he conſiders them not, looks no more after them. To this alſo the Emperor Adrian's Epiſtle ſeems to refer, which is ſet down by * Vopiſcus out of Phlegon, where ſpeaking of the great levity of Ægypt, (in reference, I ſuppoſe, to theſe heretical Chriſtians in thoſe parts, followers of Simon Magus, Baſilides, &c. whom, under the title of Samaritæ, he diſtinguiſhes from Chriſtians) that it was * light, pendulous, flying from one ſide to the other upon every ſlight report; he after expreſſeth it diſtinctly, † Thoſe that worſhip Serapis are Chriſtians, and thoſe who call themſelves Biſhops of Chriſt are devoted to Serapis: and again, ‖ The very Patriarch, (that is, either ſome High Prieſt of the Jews, or ſome Gnoſtick Pſeudo-Patriarch of Alexandria, or ſome venerable grave man among them) when he comes into Ægypt, is by ſome (that is, by the heathen officers) forced to worſhip Serapis, for fear of perſecution from them, and by others (that is, the Chriſtians) to worſhip Chriſt. Adding in fine, that * they have one God, whom Chriſtians, and Jews, and all, even the Gentiles, worſhip. This doctrine of the Gnoſticks had, it ſeems, gotten into other Churches; for to it the Apoſtle diſtinctly ſpeaks (at leaſt as far as belongs to the firſt part of it, which generally was attended with the other, the eating of Idol-ſacrifices being deſigned by them to avoid the perſecution of the Pagans, as well as the other of renouncing the faith was to avoid the perſecution of the Jews) 1 Cor. 8. 1. and thereupon it is that he ſpeaks of γνῶσις knowledge ſo much, v. 1, 2, 7, 10, 11. and oppoſes to it ἀγάπη, charity, or love, v. 1. this love of Chriſt, the thing which now we ſpeak of, and bid them take heed how they uſe their ἐλευθερία, the Chriſtian liberty, upon which they grounded the indifferency of doing thus. And upon this ground, and in this ſenſe of loving the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, it is, I ſuppoſe, that ch. 16. 21. he pronounceth anathema in the higheſt degree againſt him that loves not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, viz. him that renounces him in time of temptation. For as for want of inward love, not expreſs'd in ſome ſuch ſcandalous act, that cannot come under the Churches cenſure, nor be fit matter for an anathema. And ſo Phil. 3. 18. he mentions them under the title of the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt (mentioned alſo by Polycarp in his Epiſtle to them, p. 23.) that is, thoſe that were not at all for the ſuffering of perſecution for the faith, (the other part of that doctrine of theirs) whoſe end, ſaith he, is deſtruction, their God their belly, (by which they are again deſcribed Rom. 16. 18.) minding earthly things, (and, it ſeems, nothing elſe) and therefore would not loſe any of them for the profeſſion of Chriſt. And in many paſſages in the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, it appears, by his fortifying them againſt the deceits of theſe Gnoſticks, that they were a creeping into that Church alſo. And particularly c. 5. where not only the prohibition of all the ἀκαθαρσία, αἰσχρότης, and the μὴ ἁρμόττοντα, all that abominable filthineſs, was by the Apoſtle ſet down on purpoſe, in oppoſition to the doctrine and practice of the Gnoſtick, v. 3, 4, 5, 6. (as appears by the μηδεὶς ἀπατάτω κενοῖς λόγοις, let no man deceive you with vain words, perſuading you, as the Gnoſticks did, that this was part of Chriſtian liberty, and but an indifferent thing alſo) but particularly his cloſe of ſalutation to all thoſe that love the Lord Jeſus ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, ſo as not to be corrupted by any of the baits and ſeductions of thoſe evil times, in oppoſition, as I ſuppoſe, to the Gnoſticks in two particulars; both in the ἀφθαρσία, incorruption or purity, contrary to their filthy doctrines and practices called φθοραὶ corruptions, and in that fervent ſincere love of Chriſt which they wanted, being, as he ſaith, lovers of luſts more than lovers of God, 2 Tim. 3. 4. And ſo again in his commanding them to walk in love, c. 5. v. 2. which he expreſſes by the example of Chriſt's love, which made him ſacrifice his life for us, by that means ſhewing what love it was that needed ſtirring up in them, even that which the Gnoſticks profeſs'd to have none of, and which here through their infuſions, the Epheſians are ſaid much to have remitted, viz. that ſincere love to Chriſt (ἀγάπην ἀγάπην ἀνυπόκριτον, love without hypocriſie, commended to the Romans, c. 12. 9. in reflexion on the Gnoſticks alſo among them, as many other paſſages in the latter part of that Epiſtle, ch. 13. 1. in reſpect of their doctrines of liberty, and v. 13. of their luxury and uncleanneſs) which would make them that have it perfectly, to lay down, that is, venture their lives for Chriſt, and put off all fear of perſecution. According to which it is that S. John, in his firſt Epiſtle, defining that perfect love to Chriſt which is required of us, ſaith that it conſiſts in having παῤῥησίαν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ κρίσεως, confidence and courage to confeſs Chriſt in the day of Judgment, that is, when by ſo doing we come to be accuſed before, or condemned by perſecutors to death it ſelf, and that again it caſts out fear, v. 18. and that this is neceſſary to that confeſſing of Chriſt, v. 15. of which the ſame thing is there affirmed (viz. that he that doth ſo, abideth in God, and God in him) which is affirmed of continuing in love, v. 16. which place, as it was meant by the Apoſtle directly againſt this doctrine of the Gnoſticks, concerning the lawfulneſs and indifferentneſs of not ſuffering for Chriſt, and abjuring him in caſe of perſecution, and is ſo made uſe of by Tertullian againſt theſe very men, Adv. Gnoſt. c. 12. and De fuga in perſecutione c. 9. ſo was it by that Apoſtle directly deſigned to theſe Aſiaticks, who were his care or charge (τῆς αὐτόθι, that is, in Aſia, διέπων ἐκκλησίας, ſaith Euſebius l. 3. c. κγ'. and that he died in this Epheſus, the principal part of this his his charge, see the * Epistle of Policrates then Bishop there) that Epistle of his being address'd as a defensative against the Gnosticks that were creeping in among them. And so was S. Peter's also to the same Asiaticks, who from the point of uncleanness, and contemning of superiours, which were two parts of the Gnosticks character, 1 Pet. 2. 12, 13. proceeds to this of suffering for Christ, v. 19, &c. and c. 3. 15, 17. and 4. 16. the disliking of which, and not thinking themselves obliged to it, was another part: and so 2 Pet. 2. where he describes these very hereticks, ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι false teachers, bringing in villanous base heresies, v. 1, 3. and which he foretells them ἔσονται should come among them, he saith they are ἀρνούμενοι τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην such as deny and renounce the Lord that bought them, that is, deny Christ in time of persecution, counting that an indifferent thing, and thinking themselves Christians for all this, (for otherwise they would have been censured by the Apostles as more than false teachers, perfect Apostates, and not hereticks only) and making it one of their δόγματα or Doctrines of liberty which they laboured to bring into the Church. The same is said of them again, Jude 4. παρεισέδυσαν, &c. ἀσεβεῖς, τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ χάριν μετατιθέντες εἰς ἀσέλγειαν, there are certain men crept in—ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, which is clearly spoken of the Gnosticks and their followers, ἀρνούμενοι, &c. that deny and renounce our only Master and Lord Jesus Christ. The very same is noted of these Gnosticks in the Epistle to the Galatians, c. 6. 12. who would make them to be circumcised only ἵνα μὴ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ διώκωνται, that they might not be persecuted for the cross of Christ, that is, by the Jews. And accordingly this doctrine and practice of the Gnosticks was so taken up by the other following hereticks of those first times, that Eusebius speaking of some of the confuters of Montanus, and the οἱ κατὰ Φρυγίας the hereticks about Phrygia, and setting down the words of a principal one of them, he saith first, that he had a combat with some of them in that very Church of Galatia; and then among other things he observes of them, that when all other Christians were persecuted either by Jews or Heathens, not one of them either ὑπὸ Ἰουδαίων ἐδιώχθη or ὑπὸ ἀθεμίτων ἀπεκτάνθη, was persecuted by the Jews or killed by the Heathens. Which was a special intimation of this δόγμα of compliance among these hereticks and all that sprang from them. To the same pertains again that of the Hebrews, c. 10. 25. who forsook the assemblies, and that sure for fear of persecutions; and there they are said ὑποστολεῖς, to draw back, (in opposition to the just mans living by faith) v. 38. and so have need of ὑπομονὴν patience, perseverance, v. 36. and are exhorted to take heed of apostacy, c. 3, 12. By all this it is clear what is meant by the Ephesians remitting their first love, that is, receiving some infusions of this Gnostick doctrine, which consisted in an opposition to Christ's Doctrine of confessing the truth, especially before persecuters of it, (and is express'd by δειλία and ἀπιστία cowardise and unfaithfulness, Rev. 21. 8. attended there with all the filthy practices of the Gnosticks) in a παῤῥησία, or couragious espousing of his cause; which courage having formerly been in this Church, was now remitted, not only through some weakness, but, it seems, by imbibing this doctrine, which made it an ἀδιάφορον, or indifferent thing, even to forswear Christ, rather than die for him: and yet did these conceive themselves to continue Christians for all this, and so indeed were so far as believing in Christ, but they were not so far advanced as to that greater pitch of love that expressed it self in confessing him when that doctrine was persecuted among men. To this I conceive S. Paul refers, when in the qualification of the πρεσβύτου, Tit. 2. 2. he adds not only ὑγιαίνοντας τῇ πίστει, καὶ ἀγάπῃ— πίστει, healthy or sound in the faith, in opposition to heretical doctrines of those times, but also τῇ ἀγάπῃ and ὑπομονῇ, in love and patience, in opposition to the practices of the Gnosticks, who did not love Christ so well as to persevere in confessing him, or to suffer any thing for him. What is thus observed of the Gnosticks doctrine and infusions against confessing in time of persecution, is by * Epiphanius affirmed also of one of Elxai in the 6th of Trajan's reign, who, saith he, affirmed it to be no sin to abjure the faith in time of persecution, so it were retained in the heart. From these, saith he, came the Helkesaitæ in after-times, mentioned not only by Epiphanius, but also by Eusebius Hist. l. 6. c. κή· out of Origen upon Psal. 82. who sets it down for one of their doctrines, ὅτι τὸ ἀρνήσασθαι ἀδιάφορόν ἐστι· † καὶ ὁ μὲ νοήσας τῷ στόματι ἀρνήσηται ἐν ἀνάγκαις, τῇ δὲ καρδίᾳ ἔχει, that it is an indifferent thing to deny Christ: that he that thinks right, may in time of distress deny with the tongue, so he do not with the heart. The same is also by Tertullian in Scorpiaco affirmed of Prodicus and the Adamites, Non esse palam confitendum Christum, nec pro eo subeundum martyrium, that Christ must not be openly confess'd, nor martyrdom suffered for him.

† These words may be more probably read thus, καὶ ὁμολογήσας and having confest with his mouth he shall deny in time of distress.

V. 6. Deeds of the Nicolaitans] This Church of Ephesus, though infected with one doctrine of the Gnosticks, (see Note b.) was not, it seems, in any considerable manner defiled with their other carnal infusion, against which S. Paul had fortified them, Ephes. 5. 3, 11, 12. and this is here express'd by the Spirit's testimony of them, that they hate the deeds of the Nicolaitains. Who these Nicolaitans were, may appear by Eusebius, Eccl. Hist. l. 3. c. 29. out of Clemens Alex. l. 3. Strom. thus: Nicolas the Deacon mention'd in the Acts, having a beautiful wife, was by the Apostles (after Christ's ascension) reproached and upbraided that he was jealous of her, whereupon he brought out his wife before all Men, and gave any that would leave to marry her, saying, that this was agreeable to that saying, ὅτι παραχεῖται τῇ σαρκὶ δεῖ, that men ought to abuse the flesh. The same is affirmed by Irenæus l. 1. c. 27. Others which followed him, and laid hold of this action and speech of his ἁπλῶς καὶ ἀβασανίστως, simply and without examination of the meaning of it, ἀνειδέως ἐκπορνεύσει, saith Clemens, commit all kind of filthiness upon this score, without any kind of shame. This speech used by Nicolas, and so abused by his followers, is by Eusebius said to be the saying of Matthias, σαρκὶ μὲ μαχητέον καὶ παραχεητέον, that we must fight with the flesh and abuse it, καὶ μηδὲν αὐτῇ πρὸς ἡδονὴν ἐνδιδόντας, and not allowing it any thing for pleasure, ψυχὴν αὔξειν διὰ πίστεως καὶ γνώσεως, encrease the soul by faith and Christian knowledge. And this, saith he, was Nicolas's meaning in the use of those words; and his bringing forth his wife, of whom he was said to be jealous, was, saith he, ἀπαθῆ πάθος, a disdaining of all that carnal pleasure or desire, καὶ ἡ ἐγκράτεια τῶν αἰσχρῶν ἡδονῶν, a containing from those pleasures that are so desired by men. An argument of the truth of which, saith he, was this, that he never used any other woman but his wife; and having children by her, they all remained perpetual virgins. Which relation of his concerning the person of Nicolas, be it true or no, 'tis yet clear that his followers, which are by Eusebius said τὴν αἵρεσιν αὐτῶν μετιόντες, to enter on his heresy, and here are called Νικολαΐται Nicolaitans, were guilty of all abominable, shameless uncleanness, and called that the abusing of the flesh, and so made a Christian duty of the most abominable sin, and put off all shame and reverence in the acting of it.

V. 8. Church in Smyrna] The strangeness of Mr. Brightman's interpretations will here again appear, so far from being the speaking of God by him (as he pretends) that it is manifest that any thing that any man's phansy could represent to him, (or incline him to wish that it were the meaning of a part of this prophecy) might as commodiously be affix'd to it, as that to which 'tis here applied. For first, saith he, it must be observed that Smyrna is northward from Ephesus, and Pergamus from Smyrna, and thence he concludes that this order similem Ecclesiæ progressum proculdubio monstrat, doth without all doubt shew the like progress of the Church, still farther from the sun, the fountain of light, that is, from the first purity to greater darkness, 'till at last it comes to Pergamus, the utmost Northern point, and then turns back again toward the South. What the progress of the Church hath been, from greater to lesser purity, need not be disputed; but that any such degeneration was noted by the situation of Smyrna toward Ephesus is so far from being proculdubio, far from all doubt, that 'tis certainly a fansy of the writer's own brain, without all ground imaginable in this vision, which doth not at all take notice of this situation, or descend in the least degree to such minute considerations. After this, his second observation is, that Smyrna signifies myrrhe, myrrhe, and that ſweet and grateful to God: which being ſo contrary to the former obſervation of degeneration to greater impurity, noted thereby, it may well be expected that the artifice of accommodating it to his purpoſe muſt be very ſtrange; and ſo it is: for ſaith he, Though in the outward ſhew that Church was more deformed than the other, wanting the ſplendor and ornament of the due polity*, or Church-government, in which reſpect the Northern ſituation agrees to it; yet the ardent love of the godly, who valiantly contended for the truth in that ſtate of deformity, raiſed up to God a moſt ſweet ſavour. Thus eaſie is it for a licentious fanſie to transform any thing into any thing, even into the moſt contrary ſhape, to make the ſweet myrrhe denote the moſt ungrateful, corrupt ſtate of the Church, becauſe, forſooth, there were ſome in it ſweet and grateful. But I demand, Were thoſe pious defenders of the truth denoted by Smyrna, or not? If they were, then was it moſt unjuſt to affirm that the degeneration from the primitive purity was noted by it; if they were not, then is it a groſs deceit to render this reaſon of this denomination; the ſame directly as if he ſhould ſay, that the Church of that age which he refers to was impure and corrupt, and that was expreſly ſignified by the name, which ſignifies the greateſt purity and acceptableneſs to God.

c. λέγοντες Ἰουδαίους εἶναι ἑαυτοὺς συναγωγὴ τοῦ Σατανᾶ

V. 9. Say they are Jews] Thoſe that here are ſaid to ſay that they are Jews, when they are indeed the Synagogue of Satan, might probably enough be thought the followers of Helxai in Epiphanius hær. 19. of whom he ſaith that he was a Jew by birth, and of Jewiſh opinions, and join'd himſelf to the Hereticks of that party, but did not live according to the Law. But becauſe this Helxai was of a later beginning than the matter and perſons ſpoken of in this prophecy ſeem to be, and becauſe ſuch men as he, when they did ariſe, (I mean, Hereticks of all ſorts, in thoſe times) did join together in that great hereſie of the Gnoſticks, we muſt not faſten this part of this Viſion upon any ſuch inconſiderable perſon as Helxai, but reſolve that the men here ſpoken of are directly the Gnoſticks, who, that they might not be perſecuted by the Jews, made men circumciſe themſelves, which was directly the pretending that they were as good Jews as any, Circumciſion being a mark of the Proſelytes of juſtice, and ſuppoſing the obſervation of the whole Law (of theſe ſee Gal. 6. 12. and Note b. on this Chapter) but were not really obſervers of the Moſaical Law, Gal. 6. 3. οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι, &c. οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι αὐτοὶ νόμον φυλάσσουσι, for they do not themſelves keep the Law (perhaps were not themſelves circumciſed; for the οὐδὲ may belong to the whole complexum περιτεμνόμενοι νόμον φυλάσσουσι, and not to φυλάσσουσι only, thus, they that make others to be circumciſed, are not circumciſed themſelves, do not themſelves keep the Law) but only do εὐπροσωπεῖν, as he there ſaith, make a fair appearance, make advantage to themſelves, to avoid the fury of the Jewiſh Zelots, by cauſing others to be circumciſed. And of theſe it is that Ignatius ſpeaks Ep. ad Philadelph. when he warns them not to learn Judaiſm περὶ ἀκροβυστίας of thoſe that are not circumciſed. Now why theſe that thus pretend to be Jews are here called the Synagogue of Satan, is clear, viz. becauſe their hereſie was made up of all filthineſs and abominable carnality, which is intimated in many places of the Scripture by ἀσέλγειαι, ἀκαθαρσίαι, πορνεῖαι, κακίαι, ἀθέμιστοι, εἰδωλολατρεῖαι, πλεονεξίαι, &c. all words to denote theſe defiled practices of theirs; and ſet down diſtinctly by Epiphanius and others, but are too unſavoury to be here deſcribed. How commodiouſly theſe are by M. Brightman affirmed to be the Arians, pretending to be the pureſt Chriſtians, when they are not, (repreſenting the pureſt Chriſtians by the Jews, which were their greateſt enemies and perſecuters) I ſhall not here endeavour to examine.

V. 10. Caſt ſome of you into priſon] This perſecution here foretold ſeems to have fallen out in the time of the joint reign of Marcus Aurelius Verus, commonly called Philoſophus, and Lucius Verus his brother, aſſumed by him into the Empire anno 161. who reigned near twenty years. In his time (as it appears by Euſebius l. 4. c. ιε'. and the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna) there μέγιστοι τῆς Ἀσίας διωγμοὶ ἐπανθήσαντες, very great perſecutions diſturbed Aſia. Of this perſecution 'tis remarkable that it fell very heavy on this Church of Smyrna, and that Polycarpus was martyr'd in it, being till that time (at the age of 86.) Biſhop of this Church, which therefore wrote a full narration of it to the other Churches in that famous Epiſtle of theirs recorded by Euſebius, and ſet out lately at London by the Archbiſhop of Armagh. Before him many others were martyr'd διὰ παντὸς εἴδους κολάσεων καὶ βασάνων, with all kind of puniſhments and tortures, ſet down to the life in that Epiſtle. But of Polycarpus the ſtory is moſt large, and may there be viewed, out of which three things only I ſhall mention, in order to the explicating of this place: firſt, That he himſelf received a Viſion a little before it, and ſaw in his ſleep his pillow whereon he lay on a ſuddain ſet on fire and conſumed, and as ſoon as he waked, told thoſe which were near him, that he ſhould διὰ Χριστὸν πυρὶ ζωὴν μεταμάξαι, be burnt for Chriſt, which ſignifies this martyrdom of this Angel of the Church of Smyrna (this ὁ τῆς Ἀσίας διδάσκαλος, ὁ πατὴρ Χριστιανῶν, as the perſecuters called him, the doctor of Aſia, the father of the Chriſtians) to have been ſo conſiderable a paſſage of the Divine œconomy, that it was thought fit to be matter of a Viſion to him, and ſo might alſo well be to S. John at this time: And not only this in a dream, but, as he was a going to the ſtake, a voice was heard by many by-ſtanders, coming from heaven, Ἰσχυε, Πολύκαρπε, καὶ ἀνδρίζου, Polycarpus, be ſtrong and valiant. The ſecond thing is, That this death of his was the quenching of thoſe flames, the ending of that Emperor's perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, who ὥσπερ ἐπισφραγίσας διὰ τῆς μαρτυρίας αὐτοῦ πεπαῦσαι τὸν διωγμὸν, ſaith the Epiſtle, he did as 'twere ſeal up by his martyrdom, and ſo give a concluſion to, the perſecution: which, I ſuppoſe, is the meaning of the time of ten days δέκα ἡμέρας here ſet down for the affliction, noting ſome determinate (not very long) time in that Prince's reign, wherein it ſhould laſt, and then be quieted again. The third thing is, that not only upon Polycarpus, but upon many others, (particularly on Germanicus) great perſuaſions were uſed by the Heathens to make them renounce their faith and ſave their lives, which is the meaning of the ἵνα πειρασθῆτε, that you may be tempted: and although ſome (as Quintus a Phrygian) were overcome with theſe temptations, ἐν ψυχῇ μεγαλοψύχους, &c. yet great multitudes continued conſtant and faithful unto death, and ſo were rewarded with this crown of life, that is, the honour of Martyrdom firſt, and then the bliſs.

V. 12. Pergamus] That by Pergamus is here meant the Chriſtian Church from Gratian, An. Chr. 380 to the year 1300 is the phanſie of Mr. Brightman, ſomewhat about the proportion of the reſt of his interpretations. For, for this his only ground of affirming is, that Smyrna was diſtant from Epheſus but 320 furlongs, but Pergamus from Smyrna a greater ſpace, about 540 furlongs. But to ſee how phanſie rules this interpreter, and not any rule of proportion. For ſuppoſing that theſe diſtances of theſe cities had any myſterious ſignification in them (whereas they are not ſo much as taken notice of in the Viſions) yet when the 320 furlongs had been ſet to denote no longer ſpace than from Conſtantine to Gratian, that is, not above ſixty years, what appearance or pretence of reaſon can there be, that the addition of 220 furlongs to that number, which wants a third part to be double to the former, ſhould improve that 60 into 920 years, which is almoſt ſixteen times as much as that former? But more wonderful it is, that having proceeded by this rule of proportion, wherein 540 furlongs, that is, about 68 Engliſh miles, ſhould ſignifie the ſpace of 900 years, yet afterwards the 80 Engliſh miles, whereby Thyatira was diſtant from Pergamus, ſhould ſignifie but 220 years: the unproportionableneſs of which being diſcerned by him, was ſure the reaſon that he there choſe to ſet down that ſpace in Engliſh miles, whereas the former had been ſet down by furlongs, the the eighth part of a mile, that ſo the greater number of thoſe in one place, than of miles in the other, might amuſe the Reader, and keep him from taking notice of the unproportionableneſs.

V. 13. Satan's ſeat] This throne of Satan ſurely ſignifies the power of Satan, exerciſed in their idolatrous worſhips and ſacrifices. Thus, ſaith Surius, there was a Temple of Diana at Pergamus at this time. And in the Greek Μηνολόγιον, where Antipas's Martyrdom is commemorated, though there be not mention of this Temple, yet

h. θρόνος τοῦ Σατανᾶ

yet there is of the Idol-worſhippers and their ſacrifices, of the devils (δαίμονες σεβόμενοι παρ' αὐτοῖς) that were worſhipp'd among them, and did then acknowledge themſelves οἰκεῖν ἐν τῷ τόπῳ, to inhabit and reſide in that place, and receive τὰς παρὰ ταῦτα θυσίας, the ſacrifices that were brought them, and, in a word, of the τὴν τῶν Ἑλλήνων πάλαι θρησκείαν, the old religion of the Grecians that was amongſt them, with which Chriſtianity began now to be Competitour. To all this Metaphraſtes adds the great barbarity and profeſs'd injuſtice of that place, whoſe Citizens, ſaith he, took themſelves to be juſt, and valiant, and good, (interpreted it a ſpecial piece of vertue) if they did but accuſe a Chriſtian, or bring him to his martyrdom. By other authors it appears that Æſculapius had a Temple there, and Andreas Cæſareenſis ſaith of it, καλλίδωλον εἶναι τὴν Ἀσίαν πᾶσαν, that it was fuller of Idols than all Aſia beſide.

i. Ἀντίπας

Ib. Antipas] The ſtory of Antipas's ſufferings in the reign of Domitian is ſet down compleatly by the Menology April 11. That he was contemporary with the Apoſtles, ordained Biſhop of the (Aſiatick) Church about Pergamus, τὴν ἐν Περγάμῳ * τῆς Ἀσίας ἐπισκοπὴν κεχειροτόνηται· that in his very old age, ἐποίμανεν, he fed and ruled the flock in all godlineſs, and was therefore apprehended by the Idolaters, the Devils that were worſhipp'd among them, appearing to them and telling them, that they could not dwell there, nor receive the ſacrifices which were brought them, ἀλλὰ ἐξαύτης ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀντίπα, but that they were driven away by Antipas. Hereupon he was carried before the Prefect, who endeavoured to perſuade him ὅτι τὰ παρεστῶτα τιμιώτερα ἦν, that the old religion of the Gentiles was more venerable, that Chriſtianity was but ὀψὲ πόλις ἀρτιφυὴς, newly ſprang, received by few, and ſo not ſo venerable as the Grecian worſhip. To which he oppoſed the ſtory of Cain, and in him the antiquity of impiety, Which yet ſure, ſaid he, was not fit for godly men to ſet before them for an example. Whereby the Prefect being enraged put him into a brazen bull, πρὸς τύπον βοὸς τεχνησθέντι χαλκευτηρίῳ, wherein praiſing the mercy and power of God, and giving him thanks ὑπὲρ ὧν ἠξιώθη δι' αὐτὸν παθεῖν, for what he was thought worthy to ſuffer for him, &c. he was there ſcalded to death; and to him this inſcription is ſet in a diſtich,

Ὃς σε φλογίζειν οἶδεν, οὐ κερατίζειν,

Thou art, O Antipas, ſet to wreſtle with a bull, which could ſcald, but was not able to gore thee. As for Mr. Brightman's wanton phanſie of this name * Antipas, that it doth denote that the Martyrs of that age, to which he refers that part of the Viſion, ſhould be Antipapæ, or Antipopes, it is too vain to be ſeriouſly repeated or conſidered.

* perhaps it ſhould be ἐκκλησίας, for ſo after it follows, ὑπάρχειν τῆς τοῦ καλοῦ Περγάμου ἐκκλησίας ἀρχιερέως

* Vocatur Antipas non fictò ſed vero nomine, quod tamen tot penè literis & ſyllabis Martyres hujus temporis declaret fore Antipapas. f. 23.

k. Μάννα κεκρυμμένον

V. 17. Hidden Manna] Manna, that bread that came down from heaven among the Iſraelites, was ſo called from מן, præparavit, ἕτοιμον ἀπ' ἐσχάτου, bread ready to eat, ſent down to them from heaven, in the phraſe of the Book of Wiſdom. By this may fitly be denoted all the inward comfort and refreſhment and ſuſtenance of ſouls which God affords Chriſtians in this life, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor. 2. 9. and particularly the inward joy that ariſeth from the practice of Chriſtian vertues, which carry with them a bleſſedneſs in this life, eſpecially of confeſſing and ſuffering for Chriſt; and that is here ſaid to be beſtowed upon the Conquerour, that is, on him that holds out, falls not away to eating of the Idol-feaſts, which they that did, and by that means promiſed themſelves advantage and ſafety, are ſaid by Euſebius (ſpeaking of thoſe times) to have failed of thoſe very advantages they looked for, being put to death by the perſecutors under pretence of ſome other cauſe, as guilty of homicide, &c. and ſo to have periſhed without all comfort or hope, of which the faithful Confeſſors were ſo full. A notable teſtimony we have of this in Euſebius l. 5. c. 1. Ἐσφάλθαι μεγάλῃ τινὶ οἰκονομίᾳ Θεοῦ ἐγίνετο, &c. there was a ſtrange diſpoſal of divine providence obſervable at that time (ſpeaking of Polycarp's Martyrdom:) For they that, when they were apprehended, denied Chriſt, were yet impriſoned as Chriſtians, and there kept as murtherers and abominable perſons, and ſo were doubly miſerable above others, whoſe afflictions were alleviated, ſaith he, by the joy of ſuffering for Chriſt, by the hope of God's promiſes, by their love to Chriſt, and the Spirit of the Father; which all together make up the Manna here ſpoken of. And this is fitly here called κεκρυμμένον hidden or ſecret, becauſe it is enjoyed in the heart of the Chriſtian only.

l. ψῆφος λευκὴ

Ib. White ſtone] Ψῆφος ſignifies properly calculus, a ſtone, ſuch as they uſed in popular Judicatures or Elections, the cuſtom being to give their votes in either of theſe by ſuch ſtones. Theſe were either white or black; the white was a token of abſolution or approbation, the black of condemnation or rejection. Agreeably hereunto, as there were Judges in the Agones, ſo there were calculi too, by which the Victor's reward was aſſigned to him, a white ſtone noting it, and the Victor's name with the value of the prize written on it. That theſe are here referred to, appears by the phraſe, νικῶντι δώσω, to him that overcometh will I give, noting that reward which the βραβεῦται did adjudge to them whom they approved of, viz. to the δόκιμοι, or νικῶντες, approved and conquerours, as it is in the Oracle,

Καὶ δοκίμους σέψει, ——

Chriſt will be ſure to give them their due rewards, and will crown thoſe that are approved. Accordingly the Roman Cæſars in their games, which were in ſome kind imitations of the Grecians, had their teſſeræ ligneæ, which they threw among the people, with the name of Corn, or Plate, or Servants, or Garments written on them, which being caught by any, and carried to ſuch an officer, brought him that, whatſoever it was, which was written on it. And ſo Ariſtides the Orator ſaith, he received ψήφους from Æſculapius. See Canter. Novar. Lect. l. 5. c. 21. And this reward is here ſaid to be a new name, that is, the name of Chriſt on this white ſtone, noting the reward of perſeverance in Chriſtianity to belong to him of whom 'tis here ſaid, that 'tis an honour and dignity that no man can judge the advantages of but he that hath received it; as amongſt us, he that draws in a Lottery hath in the paper (anſwerable to the ψῆφος here) which he draws the name of the prize which belongs to him, and that he ſo draws, that no man but himſelf knows what it is. Thus c. 29. 12. ſpeaking of Chriſt's victory over his enemies, by bringing ſome to Chriſtianity, and deſtroying others, it is firſt ſaid, that he hath many crowns upon his head, each of thoſe being a teſtimony of a victory over ſome kingdom: and then to the ſame purpoſe it follows, he hath a name that no man knows but himſelf, that is, ſuch a ψῆφος, or white ſtone, or counter, on which his name is written, by which he is to receive his reward, which according to this cuſtom here may be looked on and ſeen by himſelf, but by no body elſe without his permiſſion. And what that reward was, is after ſet down in that place, v. 16. (under the title of his name) to be King of Kings, &c. that is, for the Princes of the world to be converted to Chriſtianity.

m. Θυάτειρα

V. 18. Thyatira] That Thyatira is the name of a City then in being really, appears from Act. 16. 14. As for Mr. Brightman's fanſie that the word is θυγάτειρα a young or new-born daughter, and ſo notes the growing piety of the Church from the year 1300 to 1520, which, ſaith he, as a young child, grows 'till it comes to perfection; this may go in the number of his profound inventions, of which he would perſuade the Readers that they are the dictates of the holy Ghoſt, which was ſomewhat neceſſary to be pretended, there being ſo little ſhew of ſenſe or reaſon in them.

n. Ἰεζάβηλ

V. 20. Jezabel] The hereſie of the Gnoſticks is here deſcribed by Jezabel, and the deſtruction thereof here ſet down v. 22. It began in Simon Magus: ſee Euſeb. l. 2. c. α'. He, ſaith he, ſeeing Philip's miracles, and pretending faith in Chriſt, ſo far as to obtain Baptiſm from him, ſet up μιαρωτάτην αἵρεσιν, a moſt polluted abominable hereſie. Then c. κγ'. he did many magical miracles by help of the Devil's working in him, and was counted a God in Rome in Claudius's time, and was generally worſhipp'd by the Samaritans, and by ſome few ἐν ἄλλοις ἔθνεσι in other nations (whether Judæa or Galilee, or in other places where the Jews were diſperſed) ὡς πρῶτον Θεὸν, as a chief, or firſt, or prime God. This was the meaning of δωδεκάμις Θεοῦ (as the antient MSS, have it, ſee ſee Act. 8. 10.) ἡ καλουμένη μεγάλη, the power of God, called the great power, that is, the ſupreme Divine power, (ſee 2 Theſſ. 2. 4.) To him was joined a famous whore of Tyre, and ſhe was ſtyled his πρώτη ἔννοια, his firſt conception. Now thoſe that followed this Sect of his, ſaith he, τὸ σώφρονα καὶ διὰ καθαρότητα βίου ἅπασι βεβοημένῳ Χριστιανῶν φιλοσοφίαν ὑπονοήσαντες, &c. pretending the Chriſtian Religion, ſo famous for temperance and purity of life, thinking to keep free from idolatry, which by receiving Chriſtianity they had forſaken, by the treachery of his hereſie were brought to it again, καταπίπτοντες ἐπὶ γεγραφὰς καὶ εἰκόνας αὐτῶν τε τοῦ Σίμωνος καὶ τῆς σὺν αὐτῷ Ἑλένης, θυμιάμασί τε καὶ θυσίαις καὶ σπονδαῖς τούτους θρησκεύειν ἐπιχειροῦντες, falling down before images and pictures of Simon and Helena, and doing them worſhip with incenſe and ſacrifices, &c. As for the ἀπορρητότερα the more ſecret and myſterious practices of theſe men, they are ſuch, ſaith he, ὧν τὸ πρῶτον ἐπακούσαντα ἐκπλαγήσεσθαι, that he that firſt hears them will be amazed, or, as they themſelves ſpeak (θαμβωθήσεσθαι) ſtrucken into aſtoniſhment, the things which are practiſed among them being ſo full (θάμβους, ὡς ἀληθῶς, καὶ φρενῶν ἐκστάσεως καὶ μανίας) of true horror, and ecſtaſie, and madneſs, ὡς μὴ μόνον μὴ δυνατὰ εἶναι ἁρμοδιωθῆναι γραφῇ, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ χείλεσιν αὐτὸ μόνον δι' ὑπερβολὴν αἰσχρουργίας καὶ ἀῤῥητοποιΐας ἀνδράσι σώφροσι λαληθῆναι, that not only they cannot be delivered in writing, but even that they cannot be ſpoken by any ſober men for the exceſs of filthineſs, and actions not to be uttered (ſee Eph. 5. 12.) for, as he concludes, ὅ, τι ποτὲ ἂν ἐπινοηθείη παντὸς αἰσχροῦ μιαρώτερον, τοῦτο πᾶν ὑπερεκύλισεν ἡ ἥδε μυσαρωτάτη αἵρεσις, τῆς ἀθλίας καὶ παντοίων ὡς ἀληθῶς κακῶν σεσωρευμένας γυναῖκας καταπαιζόντων, Whatſoever can be thought on as more abominable than all uncleanneſs, that is much exceeded and overcome by this deteſtable hereſie of men which deceive and defile miſerable women, laden with all kinds of ſins. Which is the very phraſe by which they are expreſs'd 2 Tim. 3. 6. Of theſe again we have the ſame Author ſpeaking in Adrian's time, l. 4. c. ε'. ζ'. that the Devil inſtead of perſecutions uſed other engines againſt Chriſtianity or the Church, πονηροῖς καὶ γόησιν ἀνδράσιν, wicked men and ſorcerers, ὀλεθρίοις ὀρφάνοις ψυχῶν, διακόνοις τε ἀπωλείας, the inſtruments of deſtroying ſouls, and miniſters of corruption or perdition, who, being γόητες and ἀπατηλοὶ, ſorcerers and deceivers, ὑποδυόμενοι τὸ αὐτῶν ἡμῖν τῆς δόξης πρόσωπον, and being called Chriſtians, and ſo conceived to have entertained and to teach thoſe doctrines, ἅτε πιστῶν τοὺς πρὸς αὐτῆς ἁλισκομένους εἰς βυθὸν ἀπωλείας ἄγουσι, lead thoſe Chriſtians that are inſnared by them into the abyſs, or depth, of perdition, and withal deter all that have not received the faith from embracing it, by ſeeing what ſuch men, that are called Chriſtians, practiſe. A next ſucceſſor of this Simon, or that took up his hereſie and improved it, was Menander, of whom Euſebius relates the ſtory, l. 3. c. κε'. as we have elſewhere ſet it down; and his concluſion is, that 'twas the Devil's deſign διὰ τοιούσδε γοήτων τὴν Χριστιανῶν πρόσωπον ὑποδυομένων, τὸ μέσα θεοσεβείας μυστήριον ἐπὶ μαζὸν ἑαυτοῦ σπάσασθαι διαβολῆν, διασύρειν τε καὶ αὐτὴν τὴν περὶ ψυχῆς ἀθανασίας καὶ νεκρῶν ἀναστάσεως ἐκκλησιαστικὰ δόγματα, by theſe ſorcerers, pretending to be Chriſtians, to deſame the myſtery of godlineſs, and ſo root out the Chriſtian doctrines of the Church, of the immortality of the ſoul, and reſurrection of the dead. After theſe came into the Church alſo Cerinthus (ſee Euſeb. l. 3. c. κη'.) as great a pretender to authority, revelations by Angels, working of miracles, and withal as great an inſtrument to Satan, in advancing of luſts and Idol-worſhips, as any. Add unto theſe the Nicolaitans, formerly deſcribed at large Note c. (ſee Euſebius l. 3. c. κθ'. and then Saturninus and Baſilides, which divided Menander's hereſie, or improved his beginnings, between them, and ſet up, one in Syria, and the other in Ægypt, θεομισῶν αἱρέσεων διδασκαλεῖα ſchools of impious hereſies (ſee Euſebius l. 4. c. ε'.) and contemporary to them Carpocrates (ſee Euſebius l. 4. c. ζ'.) the father of another ſort of the Gnoſticks who ſurpaſſed all the former, bringing into publick Simon's ſorceries, and profeſſing, by way of acknowledg'd doctrine, the practice of all uncleanneſſes, as neceſſary to all that would arrive to the perfection of their μυσαγωγία, or religion, and that there was no other way to eſcape the κοσμικοὶ ἄρχοντες, earthly rulers, as they called them, but by paying them their dues by this ἀῤῥητοποιΐα, doing ſuch things as are not to be ſpoken. And theſe, ſaith he, the Devil uſed for miniſters, when perſecution was at an end, to deceive and ſeduce ſome, καὶ οἰκτρῶς ἕτως εἰς ἀπώλειαν ἀνδραποδίζοντες, and miſerably to captivate, or emancipate, them to perdition, and to give the Gentiles that believed not πολλὴν κατὰ Θεοῦ λόγου δυσφημίας πρόφασιν, much matter of reproach againſt the word of God, the fame of theſe being ſpread every where to the reproach of Chriſtians. Theſe particulars ſet down by Euſebius thus by way of ſtory, but very much more by Irenæus, Epiphanius and Tertullian, that have written againſt theſe Hereticks ex propoſito, may ſuffice to give light to the interpretation of this part of the Viſion. As for the deſtruction of theſe, though in one place Euſebius ſay that ſome of the ſpawn and followers of them remained until his time (and though it be clear by Tertullian's books againſt the Gnoſticks, that ſome of theſe Hereticks continued ſome ſpace in the Church) yet in another place he ſaith that they were ſuddenly and remarkably extinguiſhed and brought to nothing, that is, very much brought down by the hand of God upon them. Now this hereſie of the Gnoſticks, having not any one acknowledged author whoſe name it owns, but being a colluvies of all the Hereſies then abroad, made up of Simon Magus, Menander, Baſilides, Carpocrates, Cerinthus, and the reſt, is deſcribed in this Book by ſeveral names of the moſt odious perſons in the Old Teſtament, which arrogated much to themſelves. Thus before 'tis called the doctrine of Balaam, as alſo by S. Peter and S. Jude; and now here deſcribed by Jezabel, that is, a proud, imperious, painted woman, perſecuter of the Prophet Eliah, very zealous for Idolatry, guilty of the blood of Naboth, and ſo full of all abominable wickedneſs, (which is a fit character of their doctrine and practices) and this perſon moreover ſuppoſed to arrogate to her ſelf (that which Jezabel did not) the honour and title of a Propheteſs, that is, pretending to divinity and revelation from God, a deep myſterious underſtanding of Scripture, and the βάθη Θεοῦ depths of God, 1 Cor. 2. 10. beyond all others, and from thence grounding the particular matters of this hereſie (though they were indeed but the βάθη Σατανᾶ depths of Satan, v. 24.) and calling it γνῶσις knowledge, as pretending all the followers of this hereſie to be prime ſpecial Chriſtians of great perfection, for to ſuch only is that title applied by Clemens Alexand. 'Tis true indeed that Epiphanius (and out of him others) refers this title of Jezabel to thoſe women-hereticks which followed Montanus, and took upon them to be Propheteſſes, about Commodus's reign, Priſcilla, Maximilla and Quintilla, under the pretence of Revelations ſpreading many monſtrous hereſies (of Montanus's being the Paraclete) which, ſaith he, were in this Church of Thyatira not long after S. John's time. But becauſe the Text refers to the known doctrine, and particularly the uncleanneſs of the Gnoſticks, and becauſe the hereſie of the Montaniſts was not a licentious hereſie, but rather of too much ſtrictneſs, and thereby ſeduced Tertullian to it, and laſtly, becauſe Helena that went along with Simon Magus was a woman more capable of this title, therefore I cannot adhere to that interpretation. But without defining (that which is ſomewhat obſcure) what City this of Thyatira was (one of that name being placed by Strabo in Myſia, another by Stephanus in Lydia, another by Pliny in Ionia, who alſo mentions a whole Iſland of that name) I ſhall rather interpret the hereſie (which is here ſaid to be permitted in that Church) of that known, unclean ſink of men, the Gnoſticks (deſcribed v. 14. in the ſame manner as here) that ſo over-run Aſia, than leave it to any more uncertain ſubject to be applied to.

V. 26. Unto the end] What is here meant by τὸ τέλος, the end, may appear not only by what hath been oft ſaid of it, that it notes the end of the Jews Commonwealth, (ſee Mat. 24. Note c. d.) but by the parallel phraſe that here goes before, ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἥξω until the time wherein I ſhall come. For that the coming of Chriſt notes that notable deſtruction of his enemies, the Jewiſh crucifiers of Chriſt, and perſecuters of Chriſtians, hath been often ſhew'd, (ſee Mat. 24. b.) By comparing of theſe two phraſes together, the ſenſe of this whole paſſage will be diſcoverable. To thoſe in this Church of Thyatira, and the other cities under this Metropolis, which had not fallen off to the Gnoſtick-hereſy, he gives no other counſel for the preſent, 'till this time come of deſtroying the Jewiſh perſecuters and Judaizing Gnoſticks, but that they continue as they are, do as they do, hold faſt what they have already, ver. 25. And he that ſhall do ſo, that is, continue thus conſtant againſt all temptations of either ſort, the offer of immunity from perſecutions on one ſide, and the carnalities on the other, and ſo overcome, and keep Chriſt's works, keep faſt to the Faith, 'till that long expected period, here is an honourable promiſe made to him, as the reward of this his conſtancy and perſeverance; When that end comes, and Gnoſticks and Jews be deſtroyed, and ſo peace and purity reſtored to the Church, then theſe conſtant Chriſtians ſhall be employed by Chriſt to propagate the Goſpel to thoſe who have not yet received it: and this is expreſs'd by Chriſt's giving him power over the Nations, even as he received of, or from, his Father. For firſt, it muſt be obſerved, that theſe words in the former part of ver. 27. taken out of the ſecond Pſalm, muſt be read in a parentheſis, and ſo the end of v. 26. and the latter part of v. 27. will connect together, thus, To him will I give power over the Nations, even as I received, that is, as I received from my Father. What this ſignifies, is apparent from John 20. 21. As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you. The ſame commiſſion that Chriſt had from his Father he gives to his twelve Apoſtles, that is, authority to govern the Church after him. This authority is here the Ἐξουσία power. And as the Apoſtles had this power for their time, and ſome others derivatively from them, and thoſe that ſo derived it may yet be ſaid truly, though not immediately, to have received it from Chriſt; ſo here they that are made Biſhops in the Church after the Apoſtles, receive this power from Chriſt, and he is truly and properly ſaid to give it them. And as the Apoſtles power and commiſſion was firſt to plant, then to govern Churches; ſo here the power that is promiſed theſe perſevering Chriſtians of this Church, is to preach the Goſpel, and propagate it farther than it was yet received, and having converted, then to govern Churches; and theſe being now made up, not (as before) of Jews diſperſed and their Proſelytes, but of Gentile-Idolaters that ſhould now flock in to the Faith of Chriſt, the converting them, and (having planted Churches) ruling, as Biſhops, among them, is that which is here ſtyled Ἐξουσία ἐπὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν, power over the Gentiles. And then to theſe are accommodated thoſe words out of the ſecond Pſalm, And he ſhall feed them (ſo the Septuagint reads, ποιμανεῖ feed, from the Hebrew תרעם, from רעה pavit, as a paſtor feeds his flock, though now the Hebrew copies have תרצם ſhall break, from רוץ fregit) with a rod of iron, as the Potters veſſels are broken, that is, ſhall begin with the exerciſe of Regal (in ſtead of Paſtoral) power, bring ſome to repentance, and then deſtroy the reſt, and by conjoyning of theſe two means, (both the inſtruments of his power, the one of his ſpiritual power, in ſubduing ſouls to the faith, the other of his ſecular power, in acting vengeance on the rebellious and obdurate) expulſe Heatheniſm, and plant Chriſtianity in the place. For it muſt be remembred, firſt, what is the ground of this figurative expreſſion, feed with a rod of iron, viz. an elegant variation from the cuſtom of Paſtors; they feed their ſheep, and need no more than a rod or ſtaff to manage their whole flock, but the paſtor that comes to feed any heathen nation with the ſpiritual food of the pure word of God, muſt come with aids of power, ſtrike their hearts, and powerfully convince them of ſin, bring them to contrition, and really deſtroy thoſe that will not by the preaching of the Goſpel be thus convinced: This is to feed them with a Sceptre, an iron rod, an exerciſe of Regal rather than Paſtoral power, a powerful work, firſt of grace, and then of vengeance, both neceſſary to reduce an heathen nation to Chriſtianity. And ſecondly, that thoſe words were firſt to be verified of Chriſt himſelf, in ſubduing the Gentiles to the Faith; and then as his power given him by his Father, is by him communicated to others, ſo this prophecy is appliable to others alſo. Thus is the Phraſe uſed c. 12. 5. of the Church eſtabliſhed at Rome, of which it is there foretold that it ſhall be very powerful and efficacious in converting many to the Faith, μέλλει ποιμαίνειν πάντα ἔθνη, it ſhall feed all the Nations, (in a larger manner than here is ſaid of Thyatira, where the πάντα all is omitted) that is, propagate the Faith very far. And becauſe this converſion of them to the faith conſiſts in their repentance, and forſaking of their Gentile-ſins, and rendring future obedience to the faith of Chriſt, and becauſe repentance is in Scripture expreſs'd figuratively by breaking and ſhivering of the heart, Pſal. 51. 17. which we ordinarily ſtyle contrition, and becauſe that contrition, if it be ſincere, excludes all turning again to the forſaken ſins, and that cannot better be expreſs'd than by the breaking of a pot or earthen veſſel, which when 'tis broken can by no art be made whole again, as pots of ſilver or other metal may by being melted again; therefore this coming in of Converts to the Faith is rhetorically deſcribed, both in the Pſalm and here, by breaking men as a Potter's veſſels are broken. Thus ſaith Chryſoſtome T. 6. p. 855. l. 5. Κατηχ. πρὸς πρὸ μελλ. φωτιζ. the words of the Pſalm muſt be underſtood, περὶ τῆς πιστῶν ὁ λόγος, he ſpeaks of the faithful, &c. All which being thus far cleared to be the meaning of theſe two verſes, 26, and 27. that they that were then (at the writing of this Epiſtle) but members of the Church of Thyatira, ſhould after prove eminent propagators of the Goſpel, and Biſhops of their Gentile-converts, there will be little doubt but the 28. verſe, And I will give to him the morning ſtar, (that is, to him that hath the power given him, v. 27.) is thus to be interpreted alſo. The morning ſtar ἀστὴρ πρωϊνὸς is the Greek for the Hebrew כוכב הבוקר the ſtar of the morning, and it is ſometimes called φωσφόρος the ſtar that brings light, uſhers in the Sun, 2 Pet. 1. 19. ſometimes ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ λαμπρὸς καὶ ὀρθρινὸς, Rev. 22. 16. the bright and morning ſtar, and ſometimes ἀνατολὴ the Eaſt, or day-ſpring, Luke 1. 78. And though every of theſe in all thoſe places ſignify Chriſt, in reſpect of his light and luſtre; yet it is certain that in other reſpects other things may be repreſented by it: ſo in Iſaiah the King of Babylon is called Lucifer, Son of the morning, in reſpect of his power or ſplendor above other Kings: and ſo 'tis poſſible it may here note ſome eminent Prince or Nation, that the Church of Thyatira, that is, the conſtant Orthodox pure Chriſtians in that Church, ſhould propagate the faith to, when the heretical Gnoſtick profeſſors there were finally deſtroyed. That that is the meaning of Chriſt's δώσω αὐτῷ, I will give unto him, may appear by what hath been ſaid of the phraſe of God's giving unto Chriſt, Joh. 6. Note d. giving unto him for an inheritance or poſſeſſion, from Pſal. 2. 8. which being applied and communicated here by Chriſt to men, as it is there by God to Chriſt, will denote the converſion of them to the Faith by the preaching of thoſe men, commiſſion'd by Chriſt. Thus the phraſe I will give is uſed c. 3. 9. I will give them of the Synagogue, that is, as followeth, I will make them that they ſhall come and worſhip before thy feet, that is, they ſhall be ſubdued unto thee. And ſeeing this phraſe is here alſo taken out of that ſecond Pſalm, as the former of ruling them with the rod of iron, &c. it is not improbable that from thence it may be explained. There it is ſaid to Chriſt, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion; the former part whereof is here, v. 26. giving him power over the Nations, and then why may not this be parallel to the latter part? The utmoſt parts of earth, are the extreme points, Eaſt and Weſt, and the morning ſtar may properly ſignify one of theſe, the Eaſt, in reſpect of the point wherein it is wont to ariſe and uſher in the Sun, and ſo is ſtyled ἀνατολὴ Luk. 1. the Eaſt, or day-ſpring. And then their converting the Gentiles of the Eaſtern Nations to Chriſtianity, propagating the Faith over the Eaſt, much farther, after thoſe times of perſecution were over, may very probably be the meaning of this verſe.

Paraphraſe.

1. AND unto the Angel of the Church in [a] Sardis write, [Theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven Spirits of God, and the ſeven ſtars; I know thy works, that thou haſt a name that thou liveſt, and art dead.]

1. Thus ſaith Chriſt, who hath at his command thoſe ſeven Angels of God mentioned, c. 1. 4. and hath authority over all the Biſhops or Governours of the Churches, and the congregations under them, to puniſh or reward them; I know your actions, and judge by them, and not by your pretenſions, and therefore do paſs this ſentence upon you, that although you profeſs to be Chriſtians, yet you renounce the faith when any perſecution approacheth.

2. And ſome that have not as yet fallen, are yet ready to do ſo, if they be not ſpeedily fortified, wherefore a great care muſt be taken of thoſe, that they be upheld: For though there be faith in this Church, yet there wants that love which muſt conſummate this faith, and this that perfect love that caſts out fear, that will make men confeſs Chriſt in time of greateſt hazard, this, I ſay, is wanting among you.

3. Remember therefore how thou haſt received and heard, and hold faſt and repent. If therefore thou ſhalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou ſhalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.]

3. Remember therefore the pure Chriſtian doctrine, which requires confeſſion with the mouth, as well as faith, and be ſtrong and conſtant, and make amends for your former failings. And if by continued negligence you thus fall again, expect that my judgments on you ſhall be ſudden and unpreventable.

4. Thou haſt a few names even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; and they ſhall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.]

4. Some few names, that is, perſons (Act. 1. 15.) there are in this Church, which have not failed in this kind, have held out conſtant againſt all terrors, and confeſſed, and ſuffered for my name; and theſe ſhall not fail of the reward of Martyrs, they ſhall be clothed in ſhining garments, that is, glorioufly or royally, and this as a reward of their Chriſtian conſtancy, for they have behaved themſelves as they ought.

He that holds out againſt all temptations, and confeſſes Chriſt before men, ſhall be rewarded with the richeſt Martyrs reward, and though he be ſlain here, he ſhall be ſure to gain life by loſing it: I will make good my promiſe to this Confeſſor of mine, in confeſſing and owning him before my Father and his Angels at the day of judgment.

7. Chriſt, that is pure and faithful to us, and that loveth, and owneth, and rewardeth thoſe that continue pure and faithful, undefiled, and conſtant to the profeſſing of him, that hath as a King (ſee Note on Mat. 16. h.) ſupreme, independent, abſolute power and authority put into his hand over the Church of God, and ſo whatſoever he doth, ſhall ſtand againſt all controll.

You have behaved your ſelves couragiouſly, and ſo as I approve of, and this behaviour ſhall be a means of enlarging the bounds of Chriſtian doctrine, of bringing in Proſelytes to Chriſt, in deſpight of all the cunning or force of the adverſary; and this, becauſe that little Church, or hoſt, or congregation among you, hath been kept entire, and neither defiled with the impure mixture of the Gnoſticks, nor with their doctrine of renouncing Chriſt in time of perſecution, but hath held out againſt all.

12. He that thus holds out, ſhall be a pillar of the Church, and live quietly to perform the office of an Apoſtle in it, he ſhall no more be diſturbed, or caſt out (Mat. 8. 12.) And I will acknowledge him as a perſon truly godly, a true member of the pure Catholick Chriſtian Church, known by the name of the new Jeruſalem deſcending from heaven (ſee Note on c. 21. b.) one that is approved by me as a faithful true Chriſtian, (ſee Note on c. 2. l.)

14. This is the meſſage of Chriſt, the Amen, in whom all the promiſes of God are fulfilled, the faithful witneſs, that hath confirmed the doctrine brought from his Father by laying down his life for it (and ſo is a witneſs that deſerves to be believed) and requires all his diſciples to do the like, when there is occaſion for it, he that is the father of the Chriſtian Church;

16. So then becauſe thou art luke-warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth:]

16. And ſo you are of a very indifferent temper, though there be none of thoſe which directly renounce the faith among you, yet on the other ſide, there be none that confeſs it with any warmth or zeal: and certainly the faith of Chriſt is ſuch, that if it be at all received, may deſerve our utmoſt fervency, the laying down our life for it, and if it be not thought worth that, 'twere better never to have received or profeſs'd it at all. This indifferency of yours, like luke-warm water, nauſeous to the ſtomach, and cauſe of vomiting, is matter of loathing to God, and will bring utter rejection upon you.

A great opinion you have of your ſelves, that ye are in an excellent ſtate, have need of nothing, are beyond all others, when indeed you have nothing of a Chriſtian in you, no zeal or fervency of love towards Chriſt, ye never think of ſuffering for him, or getting any part of the Chriſtian's crown.

18. My advice therefore is, that you be content to endure ſome ſmart for Chriſt, if you mean to receive any crown from him, that you be courageous in the confeſſing of Chriſt, and contend for that ſhining royal robe that belongs to Martyrs, without which (in intention at leaſt of mind) you are ſtill imperfect, and under the reproach of cowardiſe, and want of love: and to this purpoſe that ye look deeper into the nature of Chriſtian Religion, the precepts, doctrines, and examples thereof, and there ye ſhall find what yet ye ſee not, that eaſe and proſperity here are no ſign of God's favour, but on the other ſide

Lo, I have waited long, and called for, and expected this loving reception from you, and the doors being barred within by a cuſtom of ſinning and negligence, I have not yet (though I have the key in mine hand, v, 7.) found any admiſſion: And now I am admoniſhing of you, calling you to repentance; and whoſoever ſhall thus open, and receive me into a pure Chriſtian heart, I will enter into a moſt free commerce of love with him, and this converſion of his ſhall be matter of mutual rejoicing and feſtivity to both of us.

21. To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me on my throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with my Father in his throne.]

22. He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches.

Annotations on Chap. III.

a. Σάρδεις

V. 1. Sardis] That Sardis is the firſt reformed Church, in the Antitype, that of Germany, begun at Wittemberg by Luther, An. Dom. 1517. is the affirmation of M. Brightman: but without any other proof, but either that Sardis is more ſoutherly than Thyatira, and ſo, according to his phanſie, muſt have more of the life of truth in it; or becauſe there is no mention here of Balaam and Jezebel (which he had reſolved muſt ſignifie the doctrines of Chriſtian Rome) the abſence of which muſt ſignifie to him a breaking off from the Roman communion; or that ſhe had a name to be living, but was dead, which, ſaith he, muſt refer to the doctrine of Conſubſtantiation among the Lutherans, an argument that they were hugely amiſs, and ſpiritually dead after that reformation. But, alas, how far are theſe from being marks in the forehead, or the writing an Epiſtle to Germany by name, which in his Epiſtle he promiſed to ſhew us? This were a ſtrange rate of interpreting of dreams, which no Oneirocritick would allow of, but a much ſtranger of explaining of Prophecies. The ſame courſe hath he taken in the other two remaining Churches: Philadelphia muſt needs be the Helvetian, Swediſh, Genevan, French, Dutch, Scotch reformed Churches; but no reaſon for it again, but that the city of Philadelphia was yet farther ſouth than Sardis, and ſo muſt needs ſignifie ſome encreaſe of reformation; and ſecondly, that the name of Jezebel was not in it; and thirdly, that the word Philadelphia, ſignifying brotherly love, cannot be applied to any but this pattern of all piety (to which the Author had ſo much kindneſs) the Church of Helvetia and Geneva, &c. And the reformed Church of England muſt be the Church of Laodicea, not from any denotation in the name, or characters in the forehead (which he promiſed to all in his Epiſtle, and attempted to ſhew in the former of them) but only becauſe Epiſcopacy was here retained, and ſo was a mixture of cold with that of heat in the purity of the doctrine, and conſequently is the lukewarm Church which is here found fault with. How eaſily any favourer of Epiſcopal Government might apply this reaſon to any reformed Church that hath caſt out Biſhops, and ſay that they were warm in reſpect of Primitive purity of doctrine, but cold in reſpect of a government which is contrary to the Primitive, and conſequently that Geneva it ſelf were Laodicea, is obvious to every man. And yet after this manner do his groundleſs looſe interpretations proceed, which in each of theſe ſeven Churches I have pointed at, to give the Reader a δοκιμὴ, or taſte, of the interpretations of this man, whoſe licentious phanſie and love of change hath aſſiſted him to make them, and whoſe authority among many, and the opinion of the Apoſtolicalneſs of his writings hath holpen him to ſeduce and blind ſo many. Having given the Reader this view of ſo many ſeverals, I ſhall not hereafter give my ſelf that ſcope, but in the enſuing prophecies leave him to be judged of by any who ſhall be at leaſure to conſult him.

b. βίβλος ζωῆς

V. 5. Book of life] This book wherein names are ſaid to be written, and from thence blotted out ſometimes, is here uſed by analogy with Regiſters in cities containing the names of all citizens, and from which rebels and deſertors were blotted out. Cenſores populi ævitates, ſoboles, familias cenſento, Let the Cenſors ſet down, or regiſter, all mens ages, children, families, ſaith Tully de Leg. 3. Theſe were at Athens called ληξιαρχικὰ γεγραμμάτα. See ch. 13. 8. and c. 20. 12. where this book of life is diſtinguiſh'd from the books which were the records of what was done, (ſuch as mention'd Eſth. 6. 1, 2.) out of which it ſeems the records are brought, by which the wicked are judged κατὰ τὰ ἔργα according to their wicked works, which are there recorded, from which certainly it is that any man's name is blotted out of this book of life, or is not found written in it. And ſo S. Chryſoſtom and the antients underſtand this book of life to be that in which, according to their qualifications and demeanours in their lives, and eſpecially at their hour of death, men are ſaid to be written or blotted out. See Luke 10. 20. and Note on Phil. 4. a.

c. μάρτυς

V. 14. True witneſs] The word μάρτυς a witneſs is in this book, and ſince in the ordinary uſe of the Church, ſet to ſignifie one that for the teſtifying the truth of God lays down his life. And he that doth thus, as he is πιστὸς faithful to God, who hath employed him, ſo is he ἀληθὴς true (in the ſenſe that on the Goſpels we have oft given of that word,) one that deſerves to be believed: and both theſe words, πιστὸς and ἀληθὴς, faithful and true, are the juſt rendring of the Hebrew מהימן, which is here expreſs'd by Amen, a word which comes from the root אמן, which in Hiphel ſignifies credidit, believing, but in the Noun, fidus, fidelis, verus, and fide dignus, faithful, or worthy of belief. This title then of Amen, or μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς καὶ ἀληθὴς, faithful and true witneſs, is here beſtowed on Chriſt, who to teſtifie the meſſage or doctrine (which he brought) to come from heaven, laid down his life. And therefore the Church-writers, which have ſorted the Martyrs of the Church into ſeveral ranks or forms, and given them diſtinct titles accordingly, to Stephen that of πρωτομάρτυς, the firſt martyr of the Church, to the reſt of the Apoſtles, Biſhops and Eccleſiaſtical perſons, that of ἱερομάρτυρες ſacred martyrs, to the great or noble men that of μεγιστομάρτυρες noble martyrs, to the virgins and women that of καλλιμάρτυρες fair martyrs, to the common people of ἁγιομάρτυρες holy martyrs, have reſerved unto Chriſt the title of ὁ μέγας μάρτυς, the great witneſs, or Martyr.

d. Λαοδικεία

V. 15. Neither cold nor hot] All that is here ſaid of this Church of Laodicea ſeemeth very intelligible by applying to them that one part of the doctrine of the Gnoſticks, that ſeems to have gotten in among them (though not thoſe other carnal villanies) viz. that it was ἀδιάφορον an indifferent thing, perfectly lawful, to renounce Chriſt in time of perſecution. This is clearly the lukewarmneſs here, which is a middle indifferent temper between being Chriſtians and no Chriſtians, and inſtead of that God commends to them πεπυρωμένον χρυσὸν refined gold fetch'd out of the fire, that is directly the crown of Martyrdom (contrary to that mixture and allay of droſs that is now in them) and the white or ſhining garments, λευκὰ ἱμάτια the enſign and character of the Martyrs every where in this book. And for their ſaying that they are rich, &c. and not knowing that they are wretched, &c. this is again the mark of thoſe Gnoſticks, which had ſuch great ungrounded opinions of their own perfections. A phyſical diſcourſe on this place may be ſeen in Valeſius Sac. phil. c. 90.

1. In this chapter, being the beginning of another viſion, is firſt repreſented the calling and admiſſion of John into heaven by way of viſion, (as we read of S. Paul, that he was ſnatched into the third heaven, 2 Cor. 12. 2.) to receive revelations of ſome things which ſhould ſhortly come to paſs; and the manner of calling him was by a ſhrill voice, imitating the ſound of a trumper, (by which aſſemblies are wont to be called) but that it was articulate. a.

3. And he ſat as in majeſty, and the appearance of him, or the colours wherein he was repreſented to me, were like the colour of a Jaſper and Sardine ſtone, the former having its name in the Hebrew (Exod. 28. 19.) from the firmneſs and hardneſs of it, as being unmalleable, thereby to ſignifie God's omnipotence; the ſecond, (Exod. 28. 17.) from the redneſs or fireneſs of it, to ſignifie him terrible in his judgments as a flaming fire, Heb. 12. 29. But withal there was a rainbow round about the throne, which was Gen. 8. 13. a token of God's covenant with man, and is uſed Ezech. 1. to deſcribe a glorious appearance of God, (the appearance of the likeneſs of the glory of the Lord, v. 28.) and ſo again here, ch. 10. 1. and the colour of it was like an Emerald, that is, of a moſt pleaſant greenneſs, fitly ſignifying the Evangelical covenant of mercy, mixing, in all God's judgments, moſt merciful preſervations to the faithful in the midſt of his puniſhing the obdurate, ch. 7. 2, &c.

6. And before this tribunal of God's were brought all the people of the Jews, expreſſed by a ſea, or multitude of waters, (waters ſignifying people in this prophecy, c. 17. 15.) and all their thoughts and actions laid viſible and diſcernible before this Judge, their own conſciences, as a cryſtal glaſs, reflecting, and acknowledging the accuſations that are brought againſt them: And at every corner of this judgment-ſeat were the four enſigns of the ſtandards of Iſrael, meaning thereby four Apoſtles that were preſent at the Council at Jeruſalem, Act. 15. and that had moſt eſpecially reference to the Jews (which were the people on whom this judicature was to paſs) and theſe had many eyes before and behind, (ſee Note l.) that is, the gifts of prophecy, and alſo of interpreting the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, the firſt looking forward, the other backward. f. g.

7. And the four enſigns were, as they were in Ezechiel, c. 1. the images of a lion, and an ox, and a man, and an eagle, which may, by way of hieroglyphick, (fit enough for a viſion) all of them put together ſet out that title of God, [of ſlow to anger, and ſwift to mercy] and ſo repreſent him as he is in his dealing with theſe Jews, whom he was now about to judge, having warned them by the Prophets, by Chriſt, by the Apoſtles, and (the converted Jews in Aſia) by the Epiſtle to the Churches, ch. 1. 2, 3. before he proceeds to judgment againſt them, and when he doth ſo, wonderfully delivering the penitent believers out of that deſtruction. h.

9, 10, 11. And while they did ſo, the Biſhops of the Chriſtian Church in Judæa did adoration to God, acknowledging his fidelity and infinite power, from whom they have receiv'd all, and therefore are in all reaſon to employ all to his ſervice, and to depend and truſt on him in the midſt of all dangers, as on a faithful creator, 1 Pet. 4. 19. (ſee Act. 4. 24, 30.)

Annotations on Chap. IV.

a. Εἶδον

V. 1. I looked] The word εἶδον here is not to be taken in the ordinary notion of ſeeing, looking, or beholding, but in that (ſo ſolemn among the Prophets) of the Hebrew חזה, from whence their prophecies are called חזון viſion, and each prophet חוזה a Seer; and ſo 'tis generally taken in this book, and is beſt explained by ἐγενόμην ἐν πνεύματι, I was in the Spirit, ch. 1. 10. This joined here with μετὰ ταῦτα, denotes either a diſtant matter or a diſtant viſion from the former, and having no Accuſative caſe after to reſtrain it, it is a general title belonging to the whole paſſage after it, as far as that Viſion goes: For it hath formerly been ſaid, that theſe Viſions were delivered at ſeveral times (ſee the Præmonition.) At what diſtance or ſpace one from another, or in what order diſtinctly they were received, it is uncertain, ſave only that they were not before Claudius, nor after Domitian. But for the completion, there is no neceſſity that that ſhould begin at the end of the completion of the former, that is, that the deſtruction of the Jews here repreſented in this Viſion ſhould not commence till after the judgment threatned ch. 2. 3. to the Churches; (as it might be conceived to do if the whole book were but one continued Viſion) it being very poſſible that that which ſhould firſt come to paſs, might by God be choſen to be matter of a ſecond Viſion, nay that the ſame thing might be ſeverally repreſented by God, and ſo made the matter of ſeveral Viſions.

V. 2. One ſat on the throne] Who this perſon is which is here, in Viſion, brought in ſitting upon the throne, will be beſt underſtood by thoſe that ſit upon the four and twenty thrones round about him, ver. 4. That God the Father coming to judgment, and his ſaints as aſſeſſors about him, are meant by the repreſentation, there is no doubt: The whole queſtion is, who they are which are here uſed to repreſent and ſignifie theſe. And it might be thought to be the head of the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, or ſome other Conſiſtory, which thus ſat in council, the head in the midſt, in a chair or throne, and b. ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου and the members, chief Prieſts, Elders, and Doctors of the Law, on each ſide of him, in ſo many chairs alſo: But the number of the aſſeſſors here will not then agree to it, there being then 70 perſons in the Sanhedrim, and 23 in the leſſer Conſiſtories. And though perhaps the Elders in the Sanhedrim made up that number of 24, yet there were chief Prieſts, and Doctors of the Law, which ſat in the Sanhedrim as well as they. But if we apply it to the Chriſtian Church, which hath much of likeneſs with (and ſeems to have been copied out from) that pattern of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, but differs from it in ſome leſs weighty, inconſiderable circumſtances, (ſuch is the number of aſſeſſors) then it will accord very well. And the firſt conſtitution of this Church being at Jeruſalem, and that place being nearly concerned in the judicature which is here repreſented, and James, the firſt Biſhop there, being by them put to death, and that a ſpecial ingredient in their deſtruction, (ſaith Joſephus and Euſebius) that place will in all probability be the ſcene of this repreſentation, and the Chriſtian Biſhop thereof will be he that here ſitteth upon the throne or Biſhop's chair; this Biſhop ſitting in council, (as Act. 15. we know he was) and with him the Apoſtles (thoſe that were at Jeruſalem) and the Biſhops of all Judæa, the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, as of the Metropolis of all Judæa, ſitting in the middle chair, or ſeat, or throne, that of the greateſt dignity, which belonged to James, and thereupon the determination of the Council was delivered by him, Act. 15. 19.

c. κυκλόθεν τῦ θρόνυ

V. 4. Round about the throne] The meaning of κυκλόθεν τῦ θρόνυ, round about the throne, will probably be diſcerned by the antient manner of ſitting in Council or Conſiſtory among the Jews firſt, and afterward among Chriſtians. A repreſentation we have of it, Dan. 7. 9. (from which place this here ſeems to be taken, as many other things in this, out of that prophecy) I beheld 'till the ſeats, or thrones, were pitched (not thrown down, as we read, but pitched or ſet;) donec throni poſiti ſunt, ſaith the Vulgar, and ἕως οἱ θρόνοι ἐτέθησαν, ſay the Seventy, and Theodotion; and the Chaldee word is the ſame that is uſed by the Chaldee Paraphraſe, Jer. 1. 15. for the ſetting of thrones, where the Hebrew hath ינחנו, and the Seventy, καὶ θήσουσιν, they ſhall ſet every one his throne: and then it follows, and the antient of the days did ſit, placing him in the midſt of the other thrones, as the father or head of the Conſiſtory, and the judgment was ſet, v. 10, that is, the whole Sanhedrim, the reſt of the Elders, &c. ſeated on thoſe thrones round about, or on each ſide of the head, or Prince of the Conſiſtory, and the books were opened, preparative to the judicature. So in like manner in the Chriſtian Church, where the Biſhop and his Presbyters in any leſſer city, and the Metrolitan and his Biſhops in the Metropolis, are thus placed; the Presbyters, or the Biſhops, ſitting at the Eaſt end of the Church in the form of a ſemicircle, and the Biſhop, or Metropolitan, in a chair or throne of ſome eminence in the midſt of the Presbyters or Biſhops ſeats, with thoſe on each ſide of him, and then the Deacons attending or waiting on them. So in Ignatius's Epiſtle to the Magneſians we find, Μισὰ τῦ ἀξιοπρεπεσάτυ ἐπισκόπυ ὑμῶν, καὶ πνευματικῆ στεφάνῃ τῦ πρεσβυτερίυ (as the Laurentian copy now rightly reads it, not στεφάνυ πρεσβυτέρυ, as the printed Copies were wont to have it) with your moſt reverend Biſhop, and the ſpiritual crown of the Presbytery; noting the Presbyters ſitting on each ſide of the Biſhop in the faſhion of a crown, not of a full circle; for a crown was not ſo antiently, but a large ſemicircle with two ends, by which 'twas put over and tyed about the head, and accordingly the Conſtellation in heaven ſo called is not a whole or complete circle. And thus in the Apoſtol. Conſtit. l. 2. we have Ἐκκλησίας στέφανος, the crown of the Church, that is, the Biſhops and Presbyters in Conſiſtory. And indeed this manner of ſitting in an half-circle was but the ſame with their accubitus or lying at meat in an half-round, called Sigma, from the old faſhion of that letter, C; where the moſt honourable place was that in the middle, as ſome learned men have collected from 1 Sam. 20. 25. The King ſate upon his ſeat, as at other times, even upon his ſeat by the wall; where ſuppoſing the form of ſitting to be ſemicircular, the ſeat by the wall will be neceſſarily the middle of the circle. And thus in the Apoſt. Conſtit. l. 2. Κεῖσθω μέσος ὁ τῆ ἐπισκόπυ θρόνος, πας' ἑκάτερα δὲ αὐτῦ καθιζέσθω τὸ πρεσβυτέριον, Let the Biſhop's ſeat, or throne, be placed in the midſt, and on each ſide of him let the Presbytery ſit, καὶ οἱ διάκονοι παεισάσθωσαν, and let the Deacons ſtand by. And ſo Greg. Nazianzen a Biſhop in his dream deſcribes himſelf ſitting in the midſt, and his Presbyters in chairs on each hand of him. And in Theodoret Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 3. ὁ μέσος θρόνος the middle ſeat is the Biſhop's chair; and the way propounded to compoſe the difference between Paulinus and Miletius is, to ſet the Goſpel in that middle ſeat, and they καθίσαι ἑκατέρωθεν to ſit on each ſide. And the Author of the Eccleſiaſtick Hierarchy c. 3. ὁ μὲν Ἱεράρχης ἐν μέσῳ τῷ θείῳ θυσιαστηρίῳ καθίσας, The Biſhop is placed in the midſt, not of the Altar, but of that part of the Church which was called θυσιαστήριον: which what it is will beſt appear by the † Scholiaſt on Nazianzen's firſt στηλιτ. Σηκὸς καὶ τέμενος, ſaith he, σημαίνει τὸ ἱερὸν ὅλον, ὁ δὲ ναὸς, θυσιαστήριον, ἐν ᾧ ἡμῖν ἡ θεία τῶν μυστηρίων πήγνυται τράπεζα, The word σηκὸς and τέμενος ſignifie the whole Church, but the word ναὸς the nave ſignifies the θυσιαστήριον in which the divine table of the myſteries, or communion-table, is placed: by which it appears, both that the θυσιαστήριον is the whole ſpace within the Sept, and not only the Altar or Table therein, and alſo that the Biſhops being ſeated in the midſt of the θυσιαστήριον is the taking his place at the upper end of the Church, within the Sept, with the Presbyters on each ſide of him; which is alſo the way of interpreting and underſtanding all that is ſaid in the antient Writers and Liturgies, of encompaſſing the θυσιαστήριον, that is, of the Biſhop and Presbyters ſitting in a ſemicircle at the upper end of the Chancel. Which is alſo the reaſon, why in Ignatius (Ep. ad Epheſ.) being ἐντὸς τῦ θυσιαστηρίυ, within the θυσιαστήριον, ſignifies living obediently to the Biſhop and his Conſiſtory in all things, and aſſembling with them in the publick ſervice of God in the Church.

d. πρεσβύτεροι

V. 4. Four and twenty Elders] Hvaing ſeen what was meant by him that ſitteth on the higheſt or middle throne, God in the thing ſignified, but the Biſhop of Jeruſalem in the repreſentation, it will preſently follow that the πρεσβύτεροι Elders on the thrones round about him are thoſe which ſate in Council with this Biſhop, in the ſame manner as, Act. 15. we find the πρεσβύτεροι Elders mentioned. That thoſe πρεσβύτεροι Elders ſignified the Biſhops of Judæa (not the Preſbyters, as we now call them, of that one city) hath been ſaid, Note on Act. 11. b. For indeed it no way appears that at that time there were any ſuch Presbyters, (as ſoon after, and now we have) any middle order between the ſingular Biſhop in each Church, and the Deacons attending on him: and beſide it is ſaid of every of theſe, that he had on his head a golden crown, parallel to that of Joſuah the High-prieſt, Zach. 6. 11. that is, a golden mitre, ſuch as the High-Prieſt had under the Law, call'd indifferently a crown, and a mitre, which cannot belong to inferior Presbyters, but doth fitly repreſent the power of rulers, that is Biſhops in the Church, without attributing any thing of regality to them. And therefore in all probability they muſt ſignifie here the Archbiſhop of Jeruſalem, the Metropolis of all Judæa, and all the Biſhops of that Province ſitting in Council with him. Otherwiſe, the manner of ſitting being the ſame of the Presbyters of each city (where there were ſuch) about their Biſhop, and of the Biſhops of the Province about their Metropolitan (ſee Note c.) it might as properly be applied to Presbyters as to Biſhops. Now for the number of twenty four, that, I ſuppoſe, was exactly the number of the Biſhops of Judæa at that time, all beſide the Metropolitan Biſhop of Jeruſalem, (anſwerable to the number of the heads of the courſes of the Prieſts, 1 Chron. 24. who ſeem, as ſuch, to have been taken into the Sanhedrim) though the records of thoſe times being obſcure afford no demonſtration of this circumſtance.

V. 5. Seven ſpirits] The ſeven ſpirits of God here are the miniſtring ſpirits, or Angels, (ſee Note on ch. 1. b.) that attend and wait upon God as apparitors, or ſerjeants, or officers to attend the judicature, to cite and bring bring malefactors before it, and are repreſented here by the ſeven Deacons in the Church of Jeruſalem, attending on the Biſhop, Act. 6. but thoſe like lamps of fire burning, in reſpect of the glory and brightneſs wherein Angels are wont to appear.

λαμπάδες πυρὸς

f. V. 6. In the midſt of the throne] That which is here ſaid of the placing of the living creatures ἐν μέσῳ τῷ θρόνῳ, and κύκλῳ τῷ θρόνῳ, in the middle of the throne, and round about the throne, may, I ſuppoſe, be thus moſt commodiouſly explained, that ἐν μέσῳ τῷ θρόνῳ in the midſt of the throne ſhall ſignifie at the former part, that which is moſt viſible to the company; ſo to be ſet ἐν μέσῳ in the midſt, Act. 4. 7. is in a conſpicuous place, all one with before them, Act. 22. 30. and being called forth, Act. 24. 2. and in like manner to ſtand up in the midſt, Act. 1. 15. is, ſo as he may be ſeen and heard beſt by all that are preſent: And then κύκλῳ, about, which muſt needs be oppoſite to that, will ſignifie behind, or at the hinder part, and ſo κυκλόθεν, about, will ſtraight appear to be all one with ὄπισθεν at the back, or behind, (ſee Note i.) Which being granted, the ἐν μέσῳ in the midſt will neceſſarily denote the two foremoſt points of the chair or throne, where two of the living creatures are placed, and κύκλῳ about the two hindmoſt, and ſo all the four living creatures will be diſpoſed of, at each corner one. Others, I ſee, have conceived the two which are here ſaid to be ἐν μέσῳ in the middle of the throne, to have been placed one before, and the other behind (and conſequently the two that are κύκλῳ about, to be one on each ſide:) but this cannot well be imagin'd without incommodating the judge, before whom he ſtands, unleſs one be placed upon the ſteps of aſcent to the throne, and ſo below the ſpace on which the throne was ſet; which cannot probably be yielded, becauſe the throne and this place where this living creature would be placed, would not then make up one ſpace, as it ſeems to do, ch. 5. 6. where the lamb is ſaid to be in the midſt of the throne, and of the four living creatures, ſuppoſing all theſe to make up but one ſpace. But howſoever this be, this placing of the living creatures ſo near the throne, doth by the way make it appear, that this repeſentarion here refers not (as might be thought) to the encamping of Iſrael about the Ark, Num. 2. becauſe here the four living creatures are ſet cloſe to the throne, and (as appears chap. 5. 6.) nearer than the four and twenty Elders; whereas the ſtandards in Numbers are appointed to be pitched far off, c. 2. 2. the Tribe of Levi immediately environing the Tabernacle, and the camps environing that, v. 17.

g. Ib. Four beaſts] Who theſe four living creatures were in this repreſentation, may, in proportion and analogy with what hath been ſaid, be conjectured alſo. And to that purpoſe it may be obſerved, that they are both here, v. 9, and 10. and c. 5. 6. ſet betwixt him that ſat upon the throne, and the four and twenty Elders, which may probably conclude them to be four Apoſtles, who will be acknowledged to be ſuperiour to the Biſhops of Judæa, and may alſo in ſome ſenſe be conceived inferiour, in that Council of Jeruſalem, to James, advanced to be Biſhop, that is, ſupreme ruler there, (at leaſt to be there in another capacity than he was, as tranſcendent perſons, accordingly ſtanding about the throne, and not as regular members of the aſſembly.) For thus ſaith Clemens, Hypotypoſ. l. 5. Peter, James and John choſe James the brother of the Lord Biſhop of Jeruſalem, (where Ruffinus reads, Epiſcopus Apoſtolorum, Biſhop of the Apoſtles;) and though they three were ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου προτετιμημένοι by Chriſt preferred and more honoured than all the reſt of the twelve, yet did they not contend one with another for this dignity, but unanimouſly conferred it on James the Juſt, who is therefore in Scripture oft called an Apoſtle (ſee Note on Gal. 2. f.) Now that Apoſtles are meant by theſe living creatures, and alſo who thoſe four Apoſtles were, may appear by comparing this Council or Judicature here repreſented with the Council of Jeruſalem, Act. 15. There it is certain that the Biſhop James preſided, v. 13. together with the Elders or Biſhops of Judæa, v. 6. and then beſides and before theſe Elders are mentioned Ἀπόστολοι the Apoſtles, ver. 2, 4, 6. and Peter is one of them, v. 6. and (though not there named) John alſo, Gal. 2. 9. (his brother James, that was wont to be there, being before this put to death, Act. 12. 2.) And ſo there are two of them; and why may not Paul and Barnabas (ſeparated before that time to Apoſtolate, c. 13. 2.) certainly preſent in this Council, be the other two? That any other Apoſtle was then there doth not appear, and 'tis evident that theſe four were, and from them, and the Elders jointly, are theſe decrees ſent to the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, v. 23. The learned H. Grotius, I perceive, hath fallen very near upon this conjecture, only he hath placed James the brother of the Lord (that is, the Biſhop himſelf, which cannot be imagined) inſtead of John, and Matthew inſtead of Barnabas, upon no other reaſon but becauſe Matthew is found to have continued long in Judæa. But referring the matter, as the repreſentation here doth, to a Council at Jeruſalem, it will be moſt fit to pitch on thoſe four who were (in that one Scripture-Council) there preſent. And if it be objected that Paul and Barnabas were ſent thither from Antioch at this time, and therefore may not ſeem ſo properly to belong to that place; to that I anſwer, Firſt, that thoſe two being by the holy Ghoſt's appointment ſeparated to be Apoſtles, they were not affix'd to any Dioceſe or Province (as ordinary Biſhops were) but had an unlimited juriſdiction, like other Apoſtles, and conſequently had as much to do at Jeruſalem, to which, as at Antioch, from which they were ſent. Secondly, that Jeruſalem being the place from whence the Goſpel firſt went out, and began to be preached, and the faith being from thence ſent out to all other Churches, it was very reaſonable that all other Churches, at that time eſpecially, whilſt the Apoſtles reſided there, ſhould look upon that as the chief mother-city of all Chriſtians: And in that reſpect, although Antioch was the Metropolis of Syria, and that which had the third place of all the world that was under the Roman power (ἡ μητρόπολις ἐστὶ τῆς Συρίας, τρίτον ἀξιώματος ἔχουσα τόπον ὑπὸ Ῥωμαίων οἰκουμένης, ſaith Joſephus De bel. Jud. l. γ'. c. γ'.) yet it may truly be ſaid of Jeruſalem at that time, that it was the Metropolis of that Metropolis; and accordingly 'tis the affirmation of Agrippa, in Philo, concerning Jeruſalem, Μητρόπολις ἡ ἁγία χώρας Ἰουδαίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πόλεων, διὰ τὰς ἀποικίας ἃς ἐπεμψεν εἰς τὰς μὲ ὁμόρους, Αἴγυπτον, Φοινίκην, Συρίαν τήν τε ἄλλην, καὶ Κοίλην προσαγορευομένην, εἰς ἣ τὰς πόρρω διῳκισμένας, Παμφυλίαν, Κιλικίαν, &c. It is the Metropolis not only of one Province or Region, Judæa, but alſo of moſt others, becauſe of the Colonies which it ſent out to Ægypt, Phœnicia, Syria, and Cœloſyria, and to ſome farther removed, Pamphyla, Cilicia, &c. Which being ſuppoſed, and this queſtion being ſent from Antioch, the Metropolis of Syria, there is no reaſon but they that brought it, being themſelves not Meſſengers, but ſolemnly Apoſtles equal to any others, (though they came later in) and being as able to ſpeak from their own knowledge to the point in hand as any, and ſo ſpeaking at large, Act. 15. 12. and indeed ſent this journey by immediate commiſſion from heaven, Gal. 2. 2. ſhould be reckoned together with thoſe other two Apoſtles that before were there, and conſidered in the ſame capacity with them. And then ſuppoſing, as I now do, that this repreſentation here is copied out from that Council of Jeruſalem, which alone is mention'd in the ſtory of the Scripture, there will be ſmall doubt but theſe are two of the living creatures here mentioned.

h. V. 7. Firſt beaſt was like—] Of theſe four likeneſſes here, 'tis firſt obſervable from the Rabbins, Aben Ezra, &c. on Num. 2. that they were thoſe that made the four Standards of Iſrael, viz. the likeneſs of a Lion in the Camp of Judah, of a Man in the Camp of Reuben, of an Ox in the Camp of Ephraim, of an Eagle in the Camp of Dan; and accordingly חיותיך, rendred by the Septuagint τὰ ζῶά σου, thy living creatures, Pſal. 68. 10. are ſaid to be thoſe enſigns or ſtandards in their Camps, but by us rendred, thy congregations: ſee A. Maſius on Joſhua, c. 6. 9. Secondly, it is evident that theſe four reſemblances are the ſame that are ſet down Ezech. 1. 10. All the difference is that here is μόσχος a calf, which is not there, but (as in Numbers before) an ox inſtead of it. But that will be eaſily ſalved: For in the Septuagint ταῦρος, βοῦς, μόσχος, bull, oxe, calf, ſignify the ſame thing. See S. Auguſtine Quæſt. l. 2. qu. 25. Vitulos appellant Ægyptii grandes boves, ut nos Pœni Pullos gallinas cujuſlibet ætatis, The Ægyptians

Ægyptians call great oxen calves, &c. So πῶλος is uſed for an horſe or mare, which literally notes a foal, and puella, a little wench, for a woman great with child, Faſt. 2. and Horat. Od. l. 3. od. 22. and many the like. In that place of Ezechiel 'tis certain that the Cherubins, or Angels, that attend on God, are ſignified; and ſo here, ſuppoſing him that ſits on the throne to be God, theſe in the midſt and round about the throne muſt needs be the Angels alſo. But becauſe God is here repreſented in this Viſion by the Biſhop of Jeruſalem ſitting in Council, with the four and twenty Elders, or Biſhops of Judæa on ſo many chairs, or ſeats on each ſide of him, this reſemblance in proportion muſt be held, for theſe four living creatures alſo to ſignify, as was ſaid, thoſe four Apoſtles in this honourable relation, as the ſtandard bearers of the Chriſtian Iſrael, they that thus travailed to plant, and defend, and contend for the Chriſtian faith over all Judæa, and in other cities where the Jews were, and, as long as they would endure to hear it, not departing to the Gentiles, but being ſo rejected by them and perſecuted, they are now fit to be next to God about this throne, for the judging of the Jews. And that which ſome learned Jews have obſerved to be the meaning of thoſe hieroglyphicks (thoſe four likeneſſes on the ſtandards) all together, will here be applicable. There is little ſenſe in that of Aben Ezra, that the Man was in Reuben's ſtandard, becauſe he found Mandrakes, &c. or in that of the Talmudiſts, that there are four proud creatures in the world, the Lion among wild beaſts, &c. All which are vain and ridiculous. And the account which Photius gives of this matter, Epiſt. 157. is little better. The moſt ſenſible explication of the hieroglyphick given by them is, that by the ſlowneſs of the Oxe, the anger of the Lion, the ſwiftneſs of the Eagle, and the humanity, mercy, kindneſs of the Man, is meant the repreſentation of God, as he was at firſt towards the Fathers in the wilderneſs, and to their poſterity ever after, and even now when he comes to execute vengeance on them moſt remarkably, ſlow to anger and ſwift to mercy; the ſame in effect which is attributed to God by Joel, when he is conſidered in this very buſineſs of puniſhing this people, in the great and terrible day of the Lord, Joel 2. 13. the ſubject of this enſuing Viſion. As for the truth of that which is thus ſuppoſed to be repreſented by it (viz. the great patience and μακροθυμία of God, expreſs'd in the inflicting of theſe his judgments on the obdurate Jews, and the wonderful mercy in delivering the penitent believers) I ſhall only tranſcribe one paſſage from Euſebius, being his obſervation (after the ſetting down of the ſtory) to this very purpoſe, Ταῦτα δ' ἂν εἰη δίκαιον ἐπιθεῖναι, ἃ γένοιτ' ἂν ὠφελιμα πρὸς φιλανθρωπίας τε καὶ προνοίας θεοῦ φιλοτίμως ἐπιδείξασθαι. It is but juſtice to add the mention of that which will ſet before mens eyes the great mercy of the all-gracious providence of God, which forty years after their crucifying of Chriſt deferred the deſtroying of them, in which time, ſaith he, many Chriſtians, Apoſtles and others (James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, &c.) being then alive and among them, ἦσαν ὥσπερ ὀχυρώτατον παρέμβολον τῷ τόπῳ, were as a ſtrong hedge, or wall, to the place; and the θεία ἐπισκοπὴ, ſaith he, God's viſitation, did yet endure with much patience (μακροθυμοῦσα, the very word compounded of the two things ſignified by the Oxe and Lion, the ſlowneſs or μακροθυμία of the Oxe, and the θυμὸς of the Lion) εἰ ἄρα πού τι δυνηθεῖεν, ἐφ' οἷς ἐδρασαν μεταγνόντες, συγγνώμης καὶ σωτηρίας τυχεῖν, if ſo be at length repenting of what they had done, they might ſo obtain pardon and deliverance: where as the pardon and deliverance are the thing figured by the mercy of the Man, ſo are the εἰ ἄρα πού if ſo be at length, anſwerable to the (Eagle like) ſwiftneſs to it; whenſoever they repent, he inſtantly pardons. As for any more particular application of theſe four likeneſſes to the perſons of thoſe four Apoſtles, Peter, John, Paul, and Barnabas, as that Peter ſhould be the Lion, both in reſpect of his fervour and fiery zeal, generally obſerved in him (notwithſtanding his fall) and in reſpect of his primacy, πρῶτος Σίμων firſt Simon in the Goſpel, John the Eagle, in reſpect of his high ſpeculations about the Divinity of Chriſt, in his Goſpel, Paul the Oxe, in reſpect of his labour more abundant than they all, and Barnabas the Man, in reſpect of his title of humanity, by which his name is interpreted, ſon of conſolation; I ſhall not any farther inſiſt on them, becauſe they are but conjectural.

i. V. 8. Six wings about him—] In this verſe (which hath in it ſome difficulty of conſtruction) it is firſt evident, that the phraſe full of eyes belongs to the living creatures, and not to the wings, for ſo the Greek γέμοντα full concludes, which agreeth with ζῶα creatures, but cannot with πτέρυγας wings, and ſo before it had been, v. 6. τέσσαρα ζῶα γέμοντα ὀφθαλμῶν four living creatures full of eyes: and ſo it appears by the uſe of the wings to cover the face and ſecret parts, and to flie; which cannot be applied to the circuit or ambience. Next, if the Greek be conſulted, it will be alſo as clear that the κυκλόθεν καὶ ἔσωθεν round about and within, are not ſo to be divided, as in our ordinary Tranſlation they are, the former joined with the ſix wings (ſix wings round about them) and the latter to the eyes (full of eyes within) but are both together to be joined with the full of eyes, κυκλόθεν καὶ ἔσωθεν γέμοντα ὀφθαλμῶν about and within full of eyes. What is meant by κυκλόθεν καὶ ἔσωθεν round about and within may be reſolved by v. 6. where the ſame thing is expreſs'd by other words; there it is full of eyes ἔμπροσθεν καὶ ὄπισθεν, before and behind, here round about and within. The way of reconciling theſe diſtant phraſes is, I conceive, by conſidering the two parts of a Superficies, the convex or ambient part, that is, the circumference, and the concave or inner part. Theſe two we know are oppoſed one to the other, and are fitly expreſs'd by either of theſe two pairs, the outer or ambient by κυκλόθεν round about, the inner or concave by ἔσωθεν within; and ſo again (being here applied to living Creatures with their faces towards us) the ambient ſuperficies by ὄπισθεν behind, or the back parts, and the inner ſuperficies by ἔμπροσθεν before, the back parts of ſuch creatures being moſt properly the convex, and the fore parts (eſpecially when they have wings, and thoſe wings make a kind of half circle) being the concave ſuperficies. And ſo by this account, as ἔμπροσθεν before ver. 6. and ἔσωθεν within here are all one, ſo muſt κυκλόθεν about here, and ὄπισθεν behind, or on the back, there, be all one alſo. And accordingly it may be obſerved that ch. 5. 1. ἔσωθεν within is oppoſed to ὄπισθεν the back parts, as here to κυκλόθεν about, which makes it conſequent that ὄπισθεν the back part and κυκλόθεν about ſhould be all one, as now we ſet them. What is denoted by theſe two ſorts of eyes as they are applied to the Apoſtles, may perhaps be thus beſt reſolved: The eyes before are an expreſſion of their foreſight, or prophetick Spirit; the eyes behind, thoſe that look back to the Old Teſtament, and by the faculty of interpreting the prophecies and types are furniſhed with a great means of conviction to the Jews to whom they were to preach, in ſhewing them Chriſt in Moſes and the Prophets own'd by them. The not obſerving the meaning of ἔσωθεν within, as it is here all one with before ver. 6. hath made others gueſs, that their inward gifts may be meant by that, and the outward expreſſions and exerciſes of them by κυκλόθεν round about. But that notion cannot be applied to before and behind, ver. 6. and therefore cannot reaſonably be thought to have place here. Moſes had foretold that a Prophet ſhould be raiſed up, that is, the Meſſias, and they that heard not him, ſhould be cut off; and this the Apoſtles underſtood to be the preſent caſe of the Jews, ſaw this by their eyes behind them, and ſo by the many other paſſages in the Prophets to this ſame purpoſe: and beſides they had many revelations now to this matter, and thoſe are their eyes before, and accordingly whereſoever they come they warn all of this approaching deſtruction.

1 AND I ſaw [a] in the right hand of him that ſate on the throne, a book [b] written within and on the back ſide, ſealed with ſeven ſeals.]

1. And as God ſate on his tribunal, or throne of judgment, behold there was in his right hand a book or roll (ſee note on Luke 4. a.) full of writing on the inſide, and on the back-ſide, a great way down, and that roll'd up, and on the out-ſide ſealed, that no part of it could poſſibly be read; and this roll conſiſted of ſeven rolls, one within another, and every one of them had a ſeal to it, c. 6. 1. (This book of rolls containing in it the ſealed, that is, ſecret decrees and purpoſes of God upon the Jews, which as they were foretold only by Chriſt, Mat. 24. Luke 21. Mark 13. ſo are they by him inflicted and executed upon them, and that an effect of his regal power, to which, after his crucifixion, he was by his reſurrection inſtalled.)

2. And I ſaw one of the Angels, of ſpecial dignity among them, making proclamation with a loud voice in theſe words, Who is able to unlooſe the ſeals of this book, and ſo to open it, to reveal to us what is contained in it?

3. And no man in heaven, nor in earth, nor under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.]

3. And it ſeems, no creature in the world was able to do it, for upon this proclamation to all, none pretended to it.

5. And one of the Elders ſaith unto me, Weep not: behold the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to looſe the ſeven ſeals thereof.]

5. And one of the elders, ch. 4. 4. that was in one of the thrones, one of 'em that ſate with God in Judgment, comforted me, and told me that Chriſt, known by thoſe two titles, of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, Gen. 49. 9. and the root of Jeſſe, Iſa. 11. 1. having by his voluntary ſuffering of death, received this reward from his father, to have all power given to him at his reſurrection, and ſo from a ſlaughtered Lamb, being turn'd into a roaring devouring Lion, had this privilege among others beſtowed on him by his Father, to reveal, yea and to execute, the decrees contained in theſe volumes.

6. And I beheld, and lo, in the midſt of the throne, and of the four * beaſts, and in the midſt of the Elders, ſtood a Lamb, as it had been ſlain, having ſeven horns and ſeven eyes, which are the ſeven ſpirits of God, † ſent forth into all the earth.

6. This was farther exemplified to me: for I look'd & ſaw what I had not ſeen before, a Lamb bloody, with wounds viſible in him, as one that had been butchered, Chriſt crucified and riſen from the dead, and ſo indued both with power to ſubdue his enemies (fitly expreſs'd by this ſtyle of horns, ſee Luke 1. n. and ſo uſed here ch. 17. 3.) and with all knowledge and wiſdom to order it fitly, having inſtruments to execute his will, preſent, and ready preſt at his ſervice, and alſo officers (Angels ch. 4. 5. and Zach. 4. 10.) to viſit, and give him account of all that was done in Judea and elſewhere, the perſecutions which the Jews brought upon the Chriſtians.

7. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that ſate upon the throne.]

7. And this Lamb, Chriſt, came and took the book out of God's hand, that is, received power from God, as the reward of his Sufferings, to reveal and make known, and then to execute on that people thoſe heavy judgments contained in thoſe rolls.

8. And when he had taken the book, the four * beaſts and four and twenty Elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps and golden vials full of odours, which are the [c] prayers of ſaints.]

8. And when this power was given to him, this being the inſtating him in that royal authority next to God himſelf (that is, ſetting him on the throne of Judgment, called ſitting at God's right hand, or reigning till he brought all his enemies under his feet) the four living creatures, by which the four Apoſtles were repreſented, c. 4. 6. and the Elders that (c. 4. 4.) ſat on the four and twenty thrones about the Judge, gave all acknowledgments of ſupreme power to Chriſt, and every one praiſed and magnified God in theſe approaching Judgments of his, and preſented to him, beſide their own lauds, the thankſgivings of all the believers then living, who had been perſecuted, and denied the liberty of their Chriſtian Profeſſion and aſſemblies (2 Theſſ. 2. 1.) by the malice of the Jews, but now by their approaching deſtruction were likely to be reſcued from their preſſures to a flouriſhing condition of quiet for ſome ſpace.

9. And they ſung a new ſong, ſaying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the ſeals thereof: for thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every † kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation:

10. And haſt made us unto our God kings and prieſts: and we ſhall reign on the earth.]

9, 10. And in their names, and their own, they ſang praiſes to him, acknowledging this dignity and regal power to be moſt worthily inſtated on him, as a reward of his ſufferings, by which he overcame Satan, and redeemed all faithful believers, not only out of the power of ſin and hell, but alſo of their perſecutors on earth, bringing them to quiet halcyonian days, giving them tranquility, and liberty to aſſemble freely to his ſervice, as a choice peculiar people of his (ſee note on ch. 1. d.) and accordingly concluding that this royal benefit they ſhould now enjoy, thro' this act of vengeance (on Chriſt's and the Chriſtians enemies, the obdurate Jews) which was here undertaken by him, v. 6.

11. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many Angels round about the throne, and the * beaſts and the Elders: and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands,]

11. And I look'd, and behold all the Angels of heaven in infinite multitudes attending on God, joined with the Apoſtles and Biſhops in giving praiſes unto him.

12. Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing.]

12. And all ſaid with a loud voice, All power, &c. are moſt worthily attributed to Chriſt as a reward of his crucifixion. All this dignity to himſelf and advantages to believers are a juſt reward of his ſufferings, by which he hath dearly bought them.

13. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and ſuch as are in the ſea, and all that are in them, heard I ſaying, Bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.]

13. And all other creatures in the world made the ſame acknowledgment (noting theſe judgments that ſhould now fall on the Jews (as they were moſt juſt, ſo alſo) to be moſt ſeaſonable, and infinitely advantagious to his people, who ſhould be reſcued by that means.)

14. And a general adoration was paid unto Christ as unto God himself, noting this punishment of the Jews to be a just act of divine revenge on their crucifying of Christ, who being by his divine power raised from the dead, by the same destroyeth them, and preserveth his persecuted disciples.

Annotations on Chap. V.

a. ἐπὶ τὸν δεξιὸν

V. 1. In the right hand] That ἐπὶ τ δεξιὰν signifies not upon, but in the right hand of God, may appear by v. 7. where it is said to be taken ἐκ τ δεξιᾶς, out of his hand, which supposeth it formerly to be in it. And tho' this be not the ordinary notation of the Greek ἐπὶ (and therefore I see it is conceived by some, that the book was here brought, and laid by him ἐπὶ τ δεξιὰν, on his right hand) yet the promiscuous use of prepositions in these books (answerable to the Hebrews, whose Prepositions are used more loosly and largely) will give a full answer to this. Now this is no nice consideration, but that which is of use to explain that which follows, of the Lamb's taking the book out of the hand of God the father. For this book containing in it the decrees of vengeance and judgment upon the enemies of God, the crucifiers of Christ, and persecutors of the Christian faith and Professors, and this Power being by the resurrection of Christ seated and instated on Christ as a reward of his sufferings, and consequently the execution of these decrees of God put into the hand of the Son, whose coming and kingdom it is thence so often called, and this power being not again delivered up into the Fathers hands till the end of the world, all this is here fitly and fully expressed by the Lamb's taking the book out of the right hand of God the Father, (and would not so commodiously be represented, if the book had lain by him, and had not been in his hand) and by his loosing the seals, and opening the book, that is, bringing forth those judgments of God which lay folded up in his decrees, but were now remarkably executed by Christ.

b. γεγραμμένον Εσωθεν καὶ ὄπισθεν

Ib. Written within and on the back-side] It may here be thought probable of this book, which is said to be γεγραμμένον ἔσωθεν καὶ ὄπισθεν, ἐσφραγισμένον that by putting a comma after ἔσωθεν within it should thus be rendred, written within, and sealed upon the back, and so that the seven seals were all on the outside of the book. But besides that the ordinary punctation, putting the comma after ὄπισθεν on the back, resists this, there be many other circumstances clear the other to be the meaning, that the book or roll, was written within and on the back-side; by within meaning the inner concave superficies of the roll, and by the backside the convex, which is outermost in rolling up (see ch. 4. Note i.) As first, that in the process it appears that the opening of every single seal brings forth some representation, which could not be if all the seals were on the back-side; for then they must all be open'd before any part of the book could be discovered: and therefore it must be supposed that the main book or roll had seven rolls in it, and each of them sealed. 2*ly*, the phrase in this place refers to the like in Ezekiel, c. 2. 10. where a long succession of calamities is represented by a roll written within and without, that is, a roll written within throughout, and on the backside, a great way down, yet leaving enough in the lower part of the backside to wrap up all that was written, and keep it from being seen; and so for sealing also. And that is perfectly appliable to the phrase here, written within and on the backside, but so, as there should be void space left to cover all, and to seal up all. Thirdly, because the word ὄπισθεν on the back side here being all one with without in Ezekiel, & so fitly denoting not the outside of the roll when it was made up, or that part of the outside which appeared then, but the backside of the roll written on a good way, when the inside or foreside was all written on. This is fitly appliable to the matter here foretold at the opening of these seals, a long series of calamities which should fall upon this people, (just as in Ezekiel it was:) for that is the reason why a roll at any time is written on the back-side, viz. because the inside (which alone is wont to be writ on) will not contain all that belongs to it; Scriptus & à tergo, being the expression for a very long roll or book, that it is written on the backside also.

c. Προσευχαὶ τῶν Ἁγίων Βασιλεύσουσιν ἐπὶ τ γῆς

V. 8. Prayers of Saints] Who the Saints are whose prayers are here mention'd as odours, may appear, v. 10. where of them it is said, that they shall reign on the earth, that is, that the effect of the execution of these judgments of God on the enemies of Christianity, noted by the Lamb's opening the book, (Note a.) should be this, that the Christians should thereby have a peaceable being upon earth, to assemble and serve Christ, (see c. 1. Note d.) By this it is evident, that the Saints here are the Christian people upon earth, and not the Saints which reign in heaven. And this also is agreeable to the notion of odours, by which their prayers are expres's'd: for those refer to the incense that the Priests were wont to offer in the Sanctuary, whilst the people prayed without, Luke 1. 10. and their prayers supposed to go up with that incense to heaven. By this it also appears, that the four living creatures, and four and twenty elders, which have here the vials in their hands, as also the harps, the one to denote the prayers, the other the praises of the Christians, are the Apostles and Bishops of Judea, (as in the laying of the scene appeared, c. 4. Note d. & g.) whose office it was to present the prayers and praises of the Christians to God: and so by all these together the Christian persecuted Church of Judea, (and by consent with them, all other Christians over the world) are represented here, as those that had now their prayers heard, and those by the destruction of their persecutors turned into praises.

CHAP. VI.

1. And as the Lamb, that is, Christ, opened the first seal, which closed the first roll, I looked, and the first of those four living creatures called aloud to me, or in such a kind of voice as is wont to come out of thunder, when a voice is heard from heaven (see note on Acts 9. 6.) saying, Come and see, or, Here is a more full relation and prediction of those things which Christ had foretold concerning the Jews, Mat. 24. (set down here in this chapter in gross, and more particularly, as they have their execution, in the following chapters.)

And as I looked, methought I saw a white horse, and one sitting thereon, that is, an Angel representing Jesus Christ (see c. 19. 11.) now in another posture then that in which he had been, ch. 5. 6. There he was a Lamb slain, now he is a king riding in pomp (the white horse noting his glory) but this a spiritual king, the horse that he rides on being mystically the Gospel, in respect of the purity and gloriousness or divinity of its doctrine. And this horse-man, or Prince, the Lord Christ, had a bow in his hand, that is, menaces and terrors held out against his enemies, before they be really inflicted on them, as the bow is first held in the hand, then the arrow prepared upon the string, before it be shot out at them: and he had a crown given to him, as to one now instated and installed in his royal office: and his business at the present was, that which which was primarily proper to the white Horse, the Gospel, to be the power of God to salvation to them that believe, to convert the Jews to the faith, and so to conquer and melt his crucifiers; and then for the future (as

And it was a pale horſe, and a rider thereon, ſignifying great death or mortality, whether by extraordinary ways of death, the ſword & famine, or by that ordinary known way of peſtilence, following (as ordinarily it doth) upon thoſe two and ſweeping away many. And theſe three horſes, in the three laſt rolls, that is, ſword, famine, and death or peſtilence (all named together in this matter, Mat. 24. 7.) ſhould deſtroy the fourth part of the land of Judea, men and beaſts, or elſe ſhould make ſuch a vaſtation, that the wild beaſts ſhould encreaſe, and be too ſtrong for the inhabitants there. And at that very time when it came, three factions there were on foot among them, under three commanders, Eleazar, John, and Simon. And tho' Tacitus ſay that the approach of their enemy gave them peace one with another; yet Joſephus, that was an eye witneſs, relates it much otherwiſe, only that the three factions εἰς δύο μοίρας ἐστήσαν, were divided into two, by the oppreſſion of the third, John upon the day of unleavened bread ſending ſome into the Temple, under pretence of ſacrificing, which kill'd Eleazar and butcher'd his party, and ſeized upon the Temple, where before Eleazar and his Zelots had fortifi'd themſelves. And however, tho' the ſeditious join'd a while to repel the enemy, yet they ſoon returned to their former feuds, and one faction fighting againſt the other, the weight and ſmart of both fell upon the communalty, who were plunder'd by each of them. More of theſe civil combuſtions, and the fearful effects of them, we read of moſt notably in the time of the ſiege; when the ſcarcity began to pinch the beſieg'd, then the στασιασταὶ, broke into all houſes, tormented the poſſeſſors to bring out their proviſion. When mothers, † ſaith he, ſnatch'd victuals out of their babes mouths, in came the "ſeditious, and ſnatch'd it out of theirs, and catching up the children which held faſt the bits in their mouths, and would not let them go, they daſh'd them againſt the ground. Thoſe that, to prevent 'em, eat up what they had before they could come to them, they uſed with moſt horrid cruelties, ὡς ἀδικηθέντες, taking themſelves to be injur'd by them who thus robed them of their prey: and thoſe that were ready to die thro' the famine, they would yet ſearch more ſtrictly, μὴ ὑπὸ κόλπον ἔχων τροφὴν ζητοῖεν † θάνατον, leſt they ſhould have ſome food in their boſom, and only make as if they were famiſhed, when they were not; and then δειναὶ βασάνων ὁδοὶ πρὸς ἔρευναν τροφῆς, horrible ways of torment did they uſe to find out food. And ſo true is that which is here ſaid, of their killing one another, that, ſaith he, τινὰς τῶν ἐῤῥιμμένων ζῶντας διήλαυνον ἐπὶ πείρᾳ τοῦ ξιφήρους, they would run through thoſe that lay alive (but ready to faint) before them, to trie their weapons. And the horridneſs of theſe practices of theirs upon one another was ſuch, ſaith he, that if the Romans had delayed the work, the earth would have ſwallowed them up, or fire and brimſtone would have fallen from heaven on them, as on Sodom. And tho' the whole faction of the Zelots were kill'd by Titus in the Temple (a part of which they fortified and defended) yet ſtill after that, even to Adrian's time, we find mention of their frequent tumults, and butcherings of one another. But the particulars which are here in this place intimated, and the ſame Mat. 24. 6, 7. ſeem to be earlier then theſe, as being both here and there ſet before the famines, and peſtilences, and earthquakes; all which as they are both there and here mention'd, are but ἀρχαὶ ὠδίνων, the beginning of their enſuing calamities, the ſigns and fore-runners of them. And many ſuch ſlaughters there then were in the latter end of Claudius, and throughout Nero's reign, cauſed by ſeditions and tumults, from time to time ſucceeding one another, & famines in like manner conſequent to their ſeditious commotions; and ſo, as it is uncertain, ſo it matters not much in what point of time theſe here are placed. Only for the preventing of miſtakes, we may proceed thus far in defining of this time; that the famine here mentioned cannot be that foretold by Agabus, nor conſequently can the ſlaughters here mention'd be any preceding that, if what is here ſaid be by way of Prophecy. For that famine foretold by Agabus came to paſs in the ſecond year of Claudius, which was before St. John's baniſhment can be imagin'd to be: For that S. John was at Jeruſalem about the ſixth of Claudius appears by Paul's finding him there, Gal. 2. 9. at his coming up with Barnabas from Antioch to the Council there. And that Claudius did not baniſh the Jews from Rome till after this, appears, Acts 18. where, upon that occaſion, Aquila was but newly come from Rome, v. 2. at the time of Paul's being come from Athens to Corinth: and there muſt be ſome competent time intervening betwixt the Council and this: For after he ſeparated from Barnabas, his buſineſs was in Syria, Cilicia, Derbe, Lyſtra, Phrygia, Galatia, Myſia, Troas, Philippi, Amphipolis, Apollonia, Theſſalonica, Beræa and Athens. This baniſhment of the Jews from Rome, Oroſius, l. 7. c. 6. relates out of Joſephus to have been about this ninth of Claudius. And that Claudius did any act againſt Chriſtians before they were involved in that expulſion among the Jews, we have no ground or reaſon to affirm: But on the contrary Suetonius is clear, Claud. c. 25. that he baniſhed the Jews that followed Chriſt. Which makes it reaſonable to aſſent to the judgment of Chronologers, that in this ninth of Claudius, John was baniſhed from Epheſus to Patmos; all parts of the Roman dominions doing the ſame that was done at Rome. However, that John was not ſent into Patmos before that famine, doth thus appear irrefragably; No manner of perſecution fell upon the Chriſtians from the Roman Emperor, or Proconſul, or Procurator, before they were ſtirred up by the Jews, the fountains of all the perſecutions, ſaith Tertullian, Cont. Gnoſt. And the Jews ſtirred not up the Gentiles until, by the Apoſtles turning away from them to the Gentiles, they were incenſed and provoked, Acts 13. 46. and that was after the death of Herod Agrippa, which was in the fourth of Claudius. And therefore ſuppoſing the exile of St. John to Patmos to have been toward this end of Claudius's reign, it is conſequent that to that time alſo, and not before, theſe mutual ſlaughters muſt belong. And of this ſort Joſephus mentions very bloody ones, when the Sicarii raged in the time of Felix, Ant. l. 20. c. 5. And at the end of that chapter he adds, τὰς ἀπορμυδὺς τῶν ἱερέων ὑπ' ἐνδείας τελευτᾶν, that many of the Prieſts were in diſtreſs, and died for want; tho' becauſe that famine ſeems to have been on the Prieſts only by the oppreſſion of the high-prieſts, it is not certain that that is it which is here mentioned, but ſome other about that time, not particularly mentioned by him. And theſe ſlaughters wrought by theſe ſeditious perſons as they are properly parallel to the ἀρχαὶ ὠδίνων, the beginnings of pangs, Mat. 24. ſo are they to the ſecond horſe in this Viſion. And preſently after, the ſtate of Judea, is ſo related προσφάτως ἐληλυθὼς

related by Josephus, c. ζ'. as their condition may well be represented in this Vision, v. 8. where the power is given to them to kill upon the fourth part of the land with sword, and hunger, and death, the Jews never desisting from sedition, μέχρι δὴ ⸗ πόλεμον ἐξῆψαν, until they kindled and accended a war. And this will be a fit season also in which to place the crying of the souls beneath the Altar, which must be somewhat before the murther of St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem, set down after the death of Festus (and before Albinus entred the province, c. ι'.) and said to have raised great grief and indignation in all that had any sense of justice, ὅσοι ἐδόκουν ὀπιεικέσθαι τῶν καθ' ⸗ πόλιν εἶναι, καὶ τοὺς νόμους ἀκριβεῖς, βαρέως ἤνεγκαν δὴ τὰ τούτων, all that were most just in the city, and exact concerning the laws, took it very ill, saith he.

b. Χοῖνιξ

V. 6. A measure of wheat for a peny] Chœnix is not any set measure, but hath often varied in several times, saith Waserus, Ant. Mens. l. 2. c. 3. and doth ordinarily signify that proportion of wheat which will be sufficient for one man's food for a day. So Δηναρίου, is, it seems by the Gospel, Mat. 20. 2. the wages of a days labour. And then the meaning of A Chœnix for a peny is, that a mans's days-labour shall but bring him in as much bread as he daileth wanteth, all other necessaries for him, and even bread for his whole family, being wanting; for the chœnix was but the proportion for one person. This signifies the beginning of a famine, the dearness of corn, as will be discerned if it be compared with the difference that is among us between the day-wages of a labourer, and the quantity of bread which is necessary for him; two pence in bread being thought largely sufficient for a single man's food, when yet his ordinary wages is five or six times as much: by which may be guessed the meaning of a chœnix of wheat for a denary, viz, two penny-worth of bread (perhaps less) sold for a shilling, or every thing six times as dear as ordinary. And so this whole verse, and the rider of the black horse, with the ballance in his hand, is an emblem of dearth beginning, tho' not yet rioting upon them, and so is most proper to be applied to the famines in Judea, foretold by Christ, Mat. 24. 7. which yet were none of them comparable with those horrible streights of famine which befel them afterward in the siege, &c. See Note a.

c. Θάνατος, καὶ ᾅδης ἀκολουθεῖ

V. 8. Death, and hell followed] By death here, and Hades (or ἀφανισμὸς destruction) along with it, the pestilence is most probably signified, which follows the famines immediately, Mat. 24. 7. and so here in the end of this 8th ver. (sword, famine, death.) Death sure is pestilence, and that some particular pestilence, soon after the famines fore-mentioned. Yet will it not be amiss to observe how properly this word (which signifies mortality in general, without defining the way of it) may be also set to denote some other of those prodigious slaughters which after fell upon the Jews, which could not be contained under either the sword or famine before mentioned. Of this sort there were many, that especially of the three myriads, that is, thirty thousand, which in a tumult, at the feast of the Passover were thrust and trod to death by themselves, as they ran tumultuously out of the gates of the Temple; ὡσεὶ τὰς ἐξόδους τοῦ ἱεροῦ βίᾳ ζωωθούμενοι, ὡς ἀλλήλων καταπατούμενοι, saith Eusebius, l. 2. c. ιθ'.

d. Αὐτοῖς

Ib. Unto them] The αὐτοῖς them here in the Plural seems to signify the three last horses and their riders, and so to denote sword, and famine, and pestilence, the same that was mentioned by Christ, Mat. 24. 7. as the beginnings of their sorrow, or pangs of a far heavier travail, which after followed: and so no doubt there was a completion of it, in such a degree as is here spoken of, that is, ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῆς γῆς, upon the fourth part of the land; whether that signify to the destroying one tetrarchy or fourth part of the nation, (as it is certain it fell very heavy upon Galilee) or whether to the destroying very many in several parts of the nation, so that not all, but only a fourth part of the nation were thus visited by these destructions. This latter will seem the most probable, if it be applied peculiarly to that point of time which is parallel to the beginnings of sorrow, Mat. 24. And then the ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων, by the beasts, if that be the right reading, will signify the prevailing of the field, as a token and effect of a vastation in those places, where the sword, and famine, and pestilence, had made such havock, that is, in that fourth part of the land. But the King's MS. reads not, ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων, by the beasts, but τὸ τέταρτον τῶν θηρίων, the fourth part of beasts, answerable to the fourth part of the earth precedent; and then the meaning will be, that this destruction fell upon the cattel as well as men, as either in war, or famine, or pestilence it is wont to do. This hath thus far been said on supposition that what is described here, belongs to the beginnings of sorrows, and not the bitter pangs themselves. As for those, they were far more sharp and wasting, and infinitely above this proportion. The story is full of them. At the Passover (to shew the just judgments of God in avenging on them the death of his Son, at that very time wherein they crucified him) no less then 300000, which came up to that feast out of all Judea, were shut up in Jerusalem, as in a prison, in that close siege of the Romans, which made the famine so soon to rage most furiously; and this whole number, being but a small proportion to the infinite multitude more of those which were in the city before (for by Cestius computation of the 255000 and 600 sacrifices offered at one passover, at the rate of ten persons to one sacrifice, the number will be near ten times as great as this now named, besides the unclean that were excluded the sacrifice) were all, one and other, destroyed either by the famine, or by the seditious and turbulent among themselves, killing the rich προφάσει αὐτομολίας, under pretence they would betray the city, or by the pestilence, or by the enemy, (when they were taken † foraging for food, and crucified great multitudes of them before the city) or at last taken captive by the besiegers. So that of those that fell by the famine and sword, λιμῷ καὶ ξίφει, in Josephus de Captiv. l. 6. c. 44. (as here ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ καὶ ἐν λιμῷ) he there casts up the sum to an hundred and ten myriads, that is, Eleven Hundred Thousand. And for the rest of the † σταστῶδεις and λῃστικοὶ, the seditious robbers and thieves, as they were by their own accused and appeached, they were all put to death, by Fronto a Roman, after the taking the city; and of those that were still left, those which were tallest and handsomest, they were reserved for the triumph. Then of the rest that were above seventeen years old, many were sent prisoners to the works in Egypt, and many sent into the provinces to be destroyed in the Theatres, σιδήρῳ καὶ θηρίοις, saith he, by sword, and by wild beasts. And for all those that were under seventeen years old they were sold for slaves. And of these alone, saith he, the number was above nine myriads, that is, ninety thousand.

e. Θυσιαστήριον

V. 9. Under the altar] Θυσιαστήριον here, and c. 8. 3. must signify the altar of incense (called θυσιαστήριον τοῦ θυμιάματος, Luke 1. 11. but properly θυμιατήριον) not of burnt sacrifice, the whole place here represented from ch. 4. being the sanctuary within the veil, where this altar of incense stood, that other of the burnt-sacrifice standing without in the court (see Note on Mat. 23. i.) and so 'tis clear by the mention of incense, ch. 8. 3. To which purpose may be observed, what we find in * Theophylact, that the word θυμιατήριον was used peculiarly for that censer which the Chief Priest once a year carried with Incense into the Holy of holies, and that the standing altar in the Sanctuary was called θυσιαστήριον. And therefore ὑποκάτω τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου must not be rendred under the altar, (as they they that conceive it the altar of burnt sacrifice, conceive also that the souls of the Martyrs do here lie at the foot of the altar, where the blood, which is the life of living Creatures, is wont to be poured out) but in the lower part of the Sanctuary, beneath neath the altar of incenſe. Of this word ſee more in in Note on c. 11. a. As for the ſouls of thoſe that were ſlain, by that phraſe is ſignified their blood, (as the ſoul and the life is all one, and the blood is the life, Gen. 9. 4.) and the blood of the ſlain is the effuſion of their blood, (as the blood of Abel) the ſin of murthering them. The ſame is after expreſſed by ἐσφαγμένοι, thoſe that were ſlain; for of them in the Maſculine gender, and not of the ψυχαὶ in the Feminine, it is ſaid, ἔκραζον λέγοντες, they cryed, ſaying, How long, &c. All which ſignifies no more but the ſin of ſlaying the Chriſtians, and the vengeance that in juſtice from God, & by the promiſe of Chriſt, was due to it: & the whole paſſage ſeems to allude to 2*Eſ.* 4. 35. where the ſouls of the righteous ask in their chambers, ſaying, How long, &c. and the anſwer is, (as here) By meaſure hath he meaſured the times, &c. and he doth not ſtir them, till the ſaid meaſure be fulfilled; and c. 15. 8. Behold, the innocent and righteous blood crieth unto me, and the ſouls of the juſt complain continually, and therefore ſaith the Lord, I will ſurely avenge, &c. And ſo here the great perſecutions and ſlaughters of the Chriſtians wrought by the Jews, added to their crucifying of Chriſt, provoked God's vengeance on them, which ſhould ſhortly be poured out in fury, they ſtill going on to ſlay more, James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, (known by the name of the Juſt) and others, whoſe ſlaughters, by their own confeſſion, brought down that fatal deſtruction upon them.

V. 12. Great earthquake] Of the great earthquakes (in divers places, ſaith S. Luke) which were both in Aſia and at Rome, ſee Euſebius in Chronico, in the time of Nero, and Baronius A. C. 68. Neronis 12. and ſo alſo of the Eclipſe of the ſun; and of a ſtar or comet like a ſword, that ſtood over the city, and continued a year, and of a great light, that ſhined about the Altar and the Temple at nine of the night, upon the feaſt of unleavened bread, for half an hour together, and of Meteors that were ſeen thro' all the region, and of an apparition in the clouds of chariots and troops of armed men encompaſſing the city, and many the like, ſee Euſebius Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. ult. who calls them ἐναργῆ καὶ σημαίνοντα μέλλουσαν ἐρημίαν τέρατα, and τὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ κηρύγματα, prodiges manifeſtly fore-ſignifying the approaching deſolation, and ſermons as it were of God himſelf, which is the meaning of the σημεῖον, the ſign of the ſon of Man appearing in heaven. Mat. 24. 30. And among theſe Meteors, the falling ſtars that are here deſcribed, v. 13. would go for no great rarity. But Arethas mentions ſome of the ancients, who to interpret this earthquake here tropologically of Veſpatian's ſiege of Jeruſalem; and ſo it may well be underſtood, and by analogy all the reſt alſo. See Note g.

g. Ἥλιος μέλας

Ib. The Sun became black] That the blackneſs of the Sun, and bloodineſs of the Moon, and the falling of ſtars from heaven upon the ground, have a literal interpretation, of which they are capable, ſo as to note prodigies in the heavens, Eclipſes and Meteors, &c. there is no doubt. But yet here they are ſure brought to ſignify ſomething elſe. For if theſe words be compared with Mat. 24. 29. to which they are perfectly parallel, it will appear, that they are not a ſetting down the prodigies before the ſiege of Jeruſalem, but that (that being ſet down, v. 15.) the darkning of the Sun, &c. is μετὰ after that tribulation, or preſſure. All the queſtion is, whether theſe here be only a general repreſentation of ſlaughters and blood-ſhedding, which (becauſe, when they are exceſſive, they may cauſe clouds and meteors in the air) are by ſome thought to be ſo expreſs'd ordinarily in the Prophets, or whether they may not ſignify the falling of theſe judgments upon the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical ſtate repreſented by Sun and Moon, and the whole multitude of that people ſignified by the ſtars of heaven: And the latter of theſe ſeems the more probable, (ſee Note on Mat. 24. n.) for thus in the Prophets of the Old Teſtament it is ordinary, as when we read, for the iniquity of the people is the land darkned, and the like, that is, the glory and luſtre of it deſtroyed. An eminent example, directly parallel to this, we have Iſa. 34. 4. All the hoſt of heaven ſhall be diſſolved, and the heavens ſhall be rolled together as a ſcroll, and all their hoſt ſhall fall down as the leaf falleth off from the Vine, and the falling fig from the fig-tree; and my ſword ſhall be bathed in heaven. And all this but a repreſentation of God's judgments upon Idumæa, as in the next words it followeth. And ſo the hoſt of heaven, Dan. 8. 10. is ſet to denote the Jews, which being ſuppoſed, the ſtars that here fall, will be the common people or multitude of that whole Nation, all expreſſed diſtributively in the words that follow, v. 15. the kings and great ones, and the rich, and commanders of thouſands, and the mighty, and every ſervant and freeman: ſee Note on ch. 8. c.

h. Βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς

V. 15. The Kings of the earth] That this prophecy belongs to the Jews, hath been cleared by other evidences, and accordingly βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς muſt be tranſlated the kings of the land, and ſignify in this place thoſe that had or aſſumed to themſelves the greateſt authority among them, and not in any ſtricter ſenſe Kings or Heads of the people: for that notion is not appliable to any that were at Jeruſalem at this point of time, to which this viſion refers (ſee Note i.) And proportionably muſt the μεγισᾶνες, great men, denote the principal that were in the city. And then the χιλίαρχοι are the commanders or officers in their armies, the leaders of the ſeveral factions, as will appear Note i. (being elſewhere uſed for Roman officers of their militia) And then the rich men, the bond man, and the free-man, make up all that were in Jeruſalem at this time, expreſs'd, as 'tis the faſhion of the Scripture, by the ſeveral ſorts of them.

Ib. Hid themſelves in the dens] This hiding themſelves in dens, or caves, is an expreſſion of a great fear and conſternation, and thing that was foretold by St. Luke, c. 21. 26. Men deſpairing for fear, and for the expectation of the things that were a coming on that people, and this there immediately attending the Gentiles treading down of Jeruſalem, v. 24. This makes it not ſo fit to apply it to their flying to the mountains, which was before the ſiege, or to thoſe fears that were produced by the prodigies, the fore-runners of the deſtruction, ſuch as the φωνὴ ἀδήλος, the promiſcuous noiſe or voice, Μεταβαίνωμεν ἐντεῦθεν, Let us remove thence, which was generally thought to ſignify the departure of God from the Temple, adytis ariſque relictis, for this ſtill was before the deſtruction: but the paſſage to which this moſt punctually relates is that in the very time of deſtroying the city by Titus. For when the Temple was burnt, and the Prieſts hanged up, and upon an affront offered to Titus, (refuſing to relieve, or take quarter from him) the ſoldiers were permitted to plunder and fire all; the σεισιασταὶ or ſeditious go to the βασιλικὴ αὐλὴ or Palace, where many had laid up their wealth, drive out the Romans thence, kill eight thouſand of them, four thouſand Jews that had gotten thither for ſhelter, plunder the place, and the whole lower city, and then εἰς τὴν ἄνω πόλιν ἐχώρουν, retired to the upper city, Sion, the beſt fortified place, and there planted themſelves. For the taking of this, Titus was fain to uſe Engines of battery, and to that end to caſt up works: And having done ſo, as ſoon as ever a piece of the wall was beaten down, of a ſudden a ſtrange fright and conſternation took them, ſome crying out that the whole wall on the weſt was demoliſhed, others, that the Romans were entred, others that they ſaw them in the Towers; and ſuch a change followed in the minds of all their leaders, or τύραννοι, parallel to the βασιλεῖς, and δυνατοὶ, and χιλίαρχοι, Kings, and mighty men, and commanders here, that they that were juſt now in the greateſt pride and rage, and contempt of their enemies, and by the deceits of falſe prophets ſuborned by them, endeavoured to make all confident that they ſhould have ſucceſs, now trembled and quaked, and ſought which way to fly: upon which Joſephus obſerves ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ δύναμιν ὅτι τοῖς ἀνοσίοις, the

the power of God upon impious men. For, ſaith he, the Tyrants of their own accords coming down out of their towers, τῆς ἀσφαλείας ἐγύλνωσαν ἑαυτὲς, quitted their garriſons, which otherwiſe no force could have been able to take. And a multitude of them endeavouring to get away, but being not able to do ſo, run into caves under ground, and into the fouleſt vaults, and ſo the Romans took the towers, and burnt the houſes, kill'd a multitude in the ſtreets, without any the leaſt oppoſition. And ſo the city was taken, this being the laſt act of that bloody tragedy, as here this hiding in the caves appears to be attended immediately with theſe words, for the great day of his wrath is come, and who ſhall be able to ſtand? anſwerable to the Romans ſetting up their enſigns on thoſe towers at this point of time, & celebrating their victory with ſhouts and ſinging, as Joſephus ſaith; adding, that when Titus came and ſaw theſe Towers thus madly forſaken by the Jews, he wondred exceedingly, and left them ſtanding for a monument of his ſtrange ſucceſs, when he demoliſhed all other walls of the city. After this the Romans making a narrow ſearch in all the noiſome vaults and caverns, they kill'd whom they found there. And John, one of the Generals of the ſeditious, being almoſt famiſh'd in a vault, begg'd quarter, and was taken out, and kept in priſon; and ſo Simon, ſon of Gioras, the other of their Generals, having gotten into an inner vault, after ſome days his victuals failing, came out of the vault in his white ſtole and purple garment, and yielded himſelf to a Roman ſoldier that was left there. And him Titus reſerved to be carried in triumph to Rome with him. And for the reſt of the σικαριοὶ and σικάριοι, ſeditious and robbers, ſo call'd from their ſhort ſword, (that is, the remainders of the two factions, the Zelots being before murthered by the former of them in the Temple) they were appeached by one another, and brought out, and either kill'd by the Romans, or kept to adorn the triumph, or ſent as ſlaves into Egypt, or in the ſeveral provinces ſet to fight with wild beaſts on the Theatres. So exactly true is it which is here ſaid, that as the Kings and great ones, ſo πᾶς δοῦλος καὶ πᾶς ἐλεύθερος, every ſervant and every freeman, did thus hide themſelves in the caves, as the final completion of this deſtruction. And if the πέτραι τῶν ὀρέων, the ſtones of the mountains, have any farther peculiarity of ſignification, it may fitly be interpreted of the walls of the Temple, where Joſephus ſaith the Prieſts hid themſelves at the time of the firing of the Temple by the Roman ſoldiers, from whence five days after they came out, being forced by hunger, & were brought to Titus, and put to death. To which purpoſe it is commonly known, that as the Temple is called the mountain, or hill, of the Lord, ſo πέτραι ſtones may fitly ſignify walls that are made of ſtone, & ſo may probably ſignify, Mat. 27. 51. the walls of the Temple, rather then the Tomb-ſtones. And if ſo, then their hiding themſelves in the walls of the Temple, as Joſephus relates, will be literally expreſs'd by this phraſe, πέτραι ὀρέων, the ſtones of the mountains; or if not, yet prophetically and myſtically it may thus be ſignified, as that which follows, their crying to the mountains to fall upon them, is a prophetical expreſſion to ſignify the ſadneſs and direfulneſs of their preſent condition.

Hence is it that in the Goſpel 'tis called the kingdom of God, and the coming of Chriſt, and in Joſephus and Euſebius, θεία ἐπισκοπὴ, divine viſitation, Euſeb. l. 3. c. ζ'. ὄλεθρος πρὸς τῆς θείας δίκης, deſtruction from divine vengeance, c. ε'. and ἡ ἐν τῷ Θεῷ τιμωρία, puniſhment from God, ibid. and all this from St. Luke, c. 21. 22. who calls them ἡμέρας ἐκδικήσεως, days of vengeance from God, poured out upon them remarkably for what they had done unto Chriſt. And one phraſe yet more eminent there to the ſame purpoſe, Rev. 16. 14. πόλεμος τῆς ἡμέρας τῆς μεγάλης τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ παντοκράτορος, the war of the great day of God that ruleth all, that is, the bloody deſtruction which this juſt judgment of God brought upon them, for their crucifying of Chriſt, and perſecuting and killing of Chriſtians.

CHAP. VII.

Paraphraſe.

1 AND after theſe things I ſaw four Angels ſtanding on the four corners of [a] the * earth; holding the four winds of the † earth, that the wind ſhould not blow on the earth, nor on [b] the ſea, nor * on any tree.]

a. b.

1. After the general view and deſcription of God's vengeances on the Jews, ſucceed now the particular executions of them: and therein the firſt thing that was repreſented to me, was, Chriſt's peculiar care for the preſerving of the true penitent believers of them out of the common deſtruction, who are therefore firſt to be mark'd (as the houſes of the Iſraelites in Egypt, that the plague may paſs over them) and ſo ſecured before the vengeance break out upon them in common. This is here thus expreſs'd in viſion; I ſaw, ſaith he, four Angels that had power to bring puniſhments, famine, &c. (foretold, c. 6.) upon Judea, but making ſtay before they would do it, not permitting any of theſe miſchiefs as yet to break out upon them.

2. And I ſaw another Angel aſcending from the Eaſt, having the ſeal of the living God: and he cryed with a loud voice to the four Angels, to whom it was given to † hurt the earth and the ſea,

3. Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the ſea, or the trees, till we * have [c] ſealed the ſervants of our God in their foreheads.

4. And I heard the number of them that were ſealed: and there were ſealed an [d] hundred and forty and four thouſand, of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael.]

2, 3, 4. And whilſt this was a doing, I ſaw another Angel coming on a meſſage from Chriſt (intituled the Eaſt, or riſing ſun, ſee note on Luke 1.s. and Rev. 16.f.) with a writing ſealed (an ordinance or commiſſion from God) in his hand, that they proceed not to any ſuch act of miſchief, 'till the believers, or orthodox, pure ſteddy Chriſtians be ſealed, that is, put into a ſafe condition, that they partake not in that deſtruction. And theſe that are thus ſealed, and ſo preſerved, tho' they are a very ſmall deſpicable number, in reſpect of the far greater number of thoſe that were deſtroyed, only a remnant, as Noah's family of the old world, or Lot's of Sodom (ſee Luke 17. 27, 29. and note on Mat. 24. k.) are yet fourteen Myriads and four thouſand, that is, a great number, (not preciſely ſo many, or juſt 12000 and no more of every tribe;) and theſe were by God's appointment to be ſecured, before the judgments were to break out upon that people.

8. Of the tribe of Zebulon were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Joſeph were ſealed twelve thouſand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were ſealed twelve thouſand.

9. After

9. After this immediately I saw all the orthodox, pure, constant Christians, whether Jews or Gentiles, every where dispersed, of all nations, that had continued thus long under persecution of the Jews, see v. 14. looking up with faith and constancy to Christ, attending this vengeance of God on the unbelieving Jews, and owned, and acknowledged, and rewarded by God, as those that had stuck to the faith, and persevered constantly, Mat. 24. 13. tho' they had not resisted unto blood, Heb. 12. 4.

9. After this, I beheld, and lo a great multitude, which no man could number, of † all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands,]

† every nation, and tribes, πασῶν ἐθνῶν καὶ φυλῶν

10. And cryed with a loud voice, saying, e Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb.]

10. And these praised God for his deliverance (as the Martyrs called for vengeance c. 6. 9.) acknowledging all their delivery to be imputable, as a most remarkable act of mercy, to God the Father, and to Christ on whom they have believed.

11. And all the Angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders, and the four * beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God,

* living creatures

12. Saying, Amen. Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever, Amen.]

11, 12. And a multitude of Angels stood waiting on God, and encompassing the Bishops of Judea, (which were, together with the Apostles, to be gone out of the Country at this time, and so to partake of this delivery) and they joined with them in this rejoicing, and blessing of God.

13. And one of the Elders answered, saying unto me, What are these that are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?]

13. And methought, one of the Bishops ask'd me, who I thought those were (or whence) that were in the white garments of unspotted innocence, v. 9.

14. And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.]

14. And I told him I knew not, desiring him to tell me. And he told me, saying, These are the Confessors (though not Martyrs) ver. 9. that ventured their lives for Christ in the confessing him constantly.

15. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his Temple, and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.]

15. Who shall therefore live to enjoy some tranquility, and peaceable assembling, to serve him in the Church: see 2 Thess. 2. 1. and Rev. 5. 10.

16. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the Sun light on them, nor any * heat.]

16. They shall no more be persecuted or restrained from assemblies: see Isa. 49. 10.

* scorching καῦμα

17. For the Lamb which is † in the midst of the throne * shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.]

17. But live peaceably in Christ's fold (see Psal. 23. 2.) and having sown in tears, they shall now reap in joy the fruits of their patience and perseverance (see Isa. 25. 8.) a peaceable time of serving God. (Such as the Christians had in the days of Vespatian and Titus, after the destruction of the Jews.)

Annotations on Chap. VII.

V. 3. The earth] That ἡ γῆ, the earth, or land, signifies not the whole world, but particularly the land of Palestine, in many places of the New Testament, according to the notion of הארץ among the Hebrews, see Note on Mat. 5. b. and so in like manner the four corners of the land, Ezek. 7. 2. Thus saith the Lord God unto the Land of Israel, An end, The end is come upon the four corners of the land. And so sure 'tis very generally, almost constantly taken in this book, and accordingly is to be rendred, the land, and not the earth, is in the fifth commandment, and in the Prophets generally, the Hebrew is wont to be rendred; and in the latter part of this verse, where 'tis set opposite to, or distinct from the sea, &c. it may possibly signify Judea, or that part of Palestine.

a. ἡ γῆ

Ib. The sea] If Θάλασσα the sea here be taken for any part of Palestine distinct from Judea, it may then seem to signify that part of the country which was near the sea, or lake of Genesareth (see note on Luke 8. c.) as Capernaum ἡ παραθαλασσία, by the sea-side, Mat. 4. 13. in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthali, ὁδὸν θαλάσσης, by the sea-side, v. 15. This sea was the sea of Tiberias, John 6. 1. & 23. & c. 21. 1. the city Tiberias being by Herod built in the prime part of Galilee, saith Josephus, Ant. l. 18. c. 3. And so under this title of θάλασσα, sea, Galilee may be described, of which there was a Tetrarch under the Romans, and that different from the Procurator or ἡγεμὼν Governour of Judea, Luke 3. 1. as here ἡ γῆ, and θάλασσα, the land, and the sea, are set differing one from the other (see Note on Luke 21. e.) And then for the πᾶν δένδρον, every tree which is added, that also may signify that country wherein the trees did principally grow, and that may be the tetrarchy of Abyla, or Ἀβυληνὴ χώρα, the Abylene Region, Luke 3. 1. for that, saith Josephus, and the region about that, which made up Lysanias's tetrarchy, was situate in Libanus, which is so famous in Scripture for trees. See Josephus, Ant. l. 18. c. 4. But the truth is, all these together, land, and sea, and trees, may perhaps signify no more but the whole people of the Jews, without any nicer consideration of different countries in it.

b. Θάλασσα

Ἀβυληνὴ χώρα

Ib. Sealed the— in their foreheads] This sealing in the forehead is the same that is mentioned in the prophet Ezekiel, c. 9. 4. a ת, as it is thought, either for תורה the law, or for תשבה repentance (and so Theodotion renders the Hebrew תו there, not σημεῖον a sign, but θαῦ the letter Tau noting the promise of deliverance that is ascertain'd to such penitents or obedient servants of God when all others are destroy'd (for that this is the use and meaning of sealing, see Note on Ephes. 4. g.) And that this was most remarkable among the Jews at this time, appears, not only by the frequent mention of the Σωζόμενοι those that escape, and σωτηρία, deliverance or salvation, often shewed to belong to this matter, and again by the plain prediction of Christ, one shall be taken, and another left, and many the like; but by that passage in story (mentioned on Mat. 24. 26.) how Gallus having sat down and besieged Jerusalem, neglected many opportunities of taking it, and in the very next month raised the siege, recalled the army again, by which means the Christians that were in the city, remembring Christ's words, When you see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, then let them that are in Judea flee to the mountains, (and perhaps admonished by the voice, Μεταβαίνωμεν ἐντεῦθεν, Let us go hence, thus understood) immediately removed out of the city, and indeed out of Judea, and went to Pella, (see Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. ε'.) and were dispersed some in Europe, others in Asia (see note on John 7. d.) and at Titus's besieging the city there was not one Christian left in it. See Josephus de Bell. Jud. l. 2. c. 22. &c. and note on Mat. 24. g.

c. Σφραγιζόμενοι ὅτι τῶν μετώπων

Σωζόμενοι

V. 4. Hundred forty and four thousand] This number of an hundred forty and four thousand, or the proportioning it so equally between twelve Tribes must not necessarily be taken in a literal sense, that there were just so many Christians in Judea, that went out and were delivered at the time of the approach of those

d. ἑκατὸν τεσσαράκοντα τέσσαρες χιλιάδες

those judgments, or those so equally divided by Tribes; but (as in Prophecies 'tis ordinary) a certain number for an uncertain, and an obscure representation made: And perhaps all that is to be understood by, or concluded from this number, is no more but the demonstration of the truth of what Christ had said, in answer to the question, εἰ ὀλίγοι Σωζόμενοι; whether the number of the Jews which should escape were, in proportion to the others, a small or great nnmber. For there his advice to them of entring in at the streight gate; and so also the Prophet's frequent mention of the κατάλειμμα, the remnant that should escape, doth demonstrate, that of the Jews there should not be found many in proportion which should be delivered from this wrath to come, by escaping out of that wicked generation. For though Christ after his own ascent left his Apostles to preach over all the cities of Judæa (to rescue them yet, if it were possible) before this vengeance should break out upon them; yet it seems by his own prediction, Luke 18. 8. that after all this there should be found but little faith, that is, few believers, ἐν τῇ γῇ, in the land of Judæa, at the time of the Son of man's coming in judgment upon this people; few of that nation would sincerely repent and come in and adhere to him. There were indeed many of that nation which received the faith, three thousand converted at one Sermon of S. Peter's, Acts 2. 41. and καθ' ἡμέραν, (as 'tis there said ver. 47.) every day there was a proportionable addition of them, and so the Bishop of Jerusalem tells Paul, Acts 21. 20. that there were many myriads of believing Jews there. And Eusebius, mentioning Justus the third Bishop of Jerusalem, saith that he was one of μύριοι ὅσοι ἐν πεπίστευκασι, the so many myriads of Jews that believed in Christ at that time, l. 3. c. λε'. (and accordingly the number which is here said to be sealed, comes to above fourten myriads, which is no small number.) But yet of all these it must be observed, First, that many of the believers, being also zealous for the law, Acts 21. 20. fell out with the Apostles and Christianity it self when it came in competition with the Mosaical observances, and fell off to the Jewish and Gnostick part, when the persecutions fell upon the orthodox Christians, and accordingly were after destroyed with the unbelievers at this coming of Christ. Secondly, these many were yet few comparatively, or in proportion to the far greater number which held out obdurate, or else, as temporary professors, fell off again in time of persecution for the faith. And this will appear to be very fitly express'd here by this number of an hundred forty and four thousand. For, for the multitude of that people, we may make some guess at it, 1. by the account which Cestius brought Nero. He, when he had that Prefecture, being willing to give Nero an advertisement of the strength of that nation (because Nero so contemn'd it) labour'd to make use of the High-priest's arithmetick to that purpose, and he did it thus. At the feast of the Passover they numbred the sacrifices that were brought to Jerusalem at that time, and found them to be 255600. Now of those Paschal sacrifices it must be remembred, that each of them was eaten by a society, consisting perhaps of twenty, but at least of ten persons. At the proportion of ten to a sacrifice the number of those that did partake of these sacrifices must be 2556000. 2*ly*, it must be remembred also, that none had to do in those sacrifices but those which were pure and clean at that time, and therefore besides this number of these that did partake of them, it must be resolved that there was a very great number more which did not partake; all the leprous, all the women that were under any pollution, all the men to whom any thing in like manner had befaln in the night, all that were under any infection, &c. these were excluded from that former number, and in the account must be added to it: and then 'twill appear what a small number this was of 144000. out of all Judæa, in proportion to the whole people at that time, not above a thirtieth part at the highest valuation imaginable, perhaps yet a far more disproportionable number. Here if it be demanded, why the tribe of Dan is not numbred among the tribes, and Levi is; the answer for Levi will be clear, That though that tribe had no part in the division of the land, and so could not be numbred there, yet in Christ their portion was as good as any, and therefore were not here to be omitted. As for the tribe of Dan, it may be, because long before that time that tribe was either destroyed or brought very low, say the Jews; and so indeed it appears that it was not numbred among the rest of the Tribes, in 1 Chron. 2. or the following Chapters.

c. Σωτηρία.

V. 10. Salvation.] Σωτηρία, salvation, is the word which most properly signifies this deliverance of them that are said to be sealed, that is, of the penitent Jews, or sincere orthodox Christians, ζωζόμενοι, the saved, or κατάλειμμα, the remnant, (see Rom. 11. 26. and Note on Rom. 13. b.) and then the meaning of Σωτηρία Θεῷ, salvation to God, will be obvious, the imputing this deliverance to God, acknowledging it his special act, giving him all the praise and honour of it.

CHAP. VIII. Paraphrase.

1. AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was [a] silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.]

1. And after these six rolls and seals, c. 6. containing the several previous judgments that were to fall on the unbelieving Jews, and the prodigies foregoing, and prediction of utter destruction that should fall upon them; follows now the seventh roll and seal, and on the opening of that there was a representation of the service in the Temple at the time of offering incense. For first I perceived an universal silence for half an hour, that is, the people praying by themselves silently in the court (as they are wont to do, while the high priest is offering in the sanctuary.)

5. And as an effect or consequent of that, that is, of that persecution, and their prayers for deliverance (not for this vengance) it is, that the Angel fills his censer with fire from the altar of burnt-offerings, that is, with the wrath of God (so oft expresst in the Prophets by fire) and that wrath consuming, (such as the fire that consumed the burnt-Sacrifice totally) and cast it upon all Judæa; and the effects of that were Voices, and thunders, (that is, noise of thunder) and lightnings, and earthquakes, that is, great, heavie, suddain, wasting judgments upon that people, represented here in general, but particularly set down in the consequents of the sounding the seven trumpets.

Annotations on Chap. VIII.

a. Σιγὴ ὡσὶ ἡμιωρίου.

V. 1. Silence in heaven.] The manner of offering of incenſe is here deſcribed by way of viſion, the high-Prieſt offering it upon the θυμιατήριον within the Temple, the Prieſts ſhouting and blowing with the Trumpet, and the people mean-while praying without by themſelves, every one ſilently in the court ; which prayers of theirs are ſuppoſed to go up to God with the incenſe, v. 4. (a deſcription of this ſee Note on Luke 1. 10. e.) Theſe prayers of the people are here firſt ſet down by the phraſe, σιγὴ ἐν οὐρανῷ, ſilence in heaven for half an hour, the Temple being ſometime expreſs'd by heaven, ſometime by the hoſt of heaven, that is, the Sun, Moon, and Stars (ſee v. 12.) and the ſilence there being the private prayer of the People in the court, Luke 1. 10. and the time of half an hour being the ſpace that thoſe prayers uſed to continue, while the Prieſt continued within at the Altar in the Temple, and after which he uſed to come out, and pronounce the bleſſing on the people, and diſmiſs them, but 'till then they ſtayed and prayed, ſee Luke 1. 21. And if beſide this primary and literal, any ſecondary myſtical ſenſe of this phraſe ſilence in heaven about half an hour, need to be obſerved, it may not unfitly be this, that it denote a ſhort amazement in the faithful perſevering Chriſtians, joyned with an awful reverence of the Divine Majeſty, and compaſſion of their native country, upon the apprehenſion of the calamities now to be inflicted. Theſe might juſtly provoke a ſadneſs and an amazement. But then the conſideration of God's Glory, ariſing out of this his Juſtice upon the impenitent, and alſo of the merciful deliverance of the faithful, not only from this miſery, but even by means of this miſery, (the deſtruction of the perſecutors being the releaſe of the perſecuted) theſe make the amazement and compaſſion not to remain long, and ſo the ſilence to be for a ſhort ſpace. But this by the way, as a deſcant, not an interpretation. Then next, the trumpeting of the Prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, Eccluſ. 50. 16. is here expreſs'd by the ſeven trumpets given to the ſeven Angels, v. 2. then the High-Prieſts offering the incenſe is deſcribed by the other Angel having the golden Cenſer, &c. v. 3. And all this repreſentation was here fitly ſet in the Viſion to ſignifie the prayers of the true faithful Chriſtians, and their acceptance with God, to which is conſequent their deliverance ; while all other the impenitent unbelievers have this vengeance poured down upon them, nay, as an effect of the hearing theſe prayers of the godly (though they prayed not for judgments on the reſt) is the very vengeance on the wicked, who perſecute the godly, (as when Abel's blood is ſaid to cry to heaven for vengeance againſt Cain,) for ſo every where moſt bitterly did the Jews perſecute the Chriſtians. See Note on c. 2. b. and Gal. 6. 12.

Ἐπὶ ἡμιώριον.

Αἵματι τῷ Ἀβὲλ.

b. Φωναὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ σεισμοὶ.

V. 5. Voices and thunderings and——] That φωναὶ and βρονταὶ, voices and thunders are all one (from the equivocalneſs of the Hebrew word, which ſignifies both) hath been often ſaid ; and ſo here, by theſe two words there is no more meant than either of them would have imported, thunder ; to which lightning and earthquake are fitly joined, to ſignifie in general the judgments of God, and vengeance on this people, which are more ſpecially deſcribed and repreſented under the ſounding of the ſeven trumpets that follow, and the productions of each of them. And though the σεισμὸς or earthquake here mentioned, may fitly ſignifie the commotions and ſtirs which are prefigured by the three firſt Angels, (ſee note c.) yet this verſe here, belonging equally to all that follows, and not peculiarly to thoſe three, will more fitly be interpreted in a general notion comprehenſive of all that is after more particularly deſcrib'd (and ſo the earthquake will ſignify a ſhaking, preparative to a fall and deſolation) than by any ſuch propriety of the earthquake, be thus confined.

c. πῦρ, πῦρ.

V. 7. Fire.] What is ſignified by the ſoundings of the three firſt Angels here, will be gueſs'd by the fire, obſervable in each of them here, πῦρ μεμιγμένον ἐν αἵματι, fire join'd with the hail precedent, (and then blood ſuperadded to both of them) A mountain burning with fire, v. 8. and a ſtar burning as it were a lamp, v. 10. Now there is nothing more fitly reſembled by fire, than ſedition or rebellion is. All kind of contention being indeed a fire, and ordinarily ſtyled πύρωσις, a combuſtion: but the greater it is, as rebellion is of all other the greateſt, the better it deſerves that title : and this, becauſe as a little fire ſets a whole houſe, a whole kingdom, a whole world on fire, Ja. 3. 5, 6. and beginning from very ſmall ſparks aſcends quickly into a very great flame; ſo ſedition began by one, ſecretly ſteals on on and encreaſes, draws whole multitudes unto it, and then, as fire alſo, devours and deſtroys where-ever it comes, lays all waſte before it. Now it is obſervable in the Jewiſh records of thoſe times, how full the hiſtory is of two ſorts of moſt violent diſturbers, Στασιασαὶ and Ζηλωταὶ, the Seditious and the Zelots. And though the fire here might properly enough belong to either of theſe, yet it is very fit to make a diſtinction between them in the predictions here, as we know there is in the hiſtories of them. The Στασιασαὶ, or ſeditious, ſtirred up rebellion againſt the Romans, pretending and deſigning to caſt off that yoke of their Conquerors, under the conduct of the ψευδόχριστοι, falſe Chriſts, which undertook to redeem Iſrael out of their ſlavery. But the Ζηλωταὶ Zelots, exerciſed tyranny, and all manner of cruelty upon their own countrymen. The latter of theſe were immediately before the ſiege, and in time of the ſiege, and are deſcribed by the Ακρίδες Locuſts moſt fitly, c. 9. 3. But the former, the Seditious, which raiſed thoſe ſtirs and tumults, which cauſed the Romans to ſend armies to the ſubduing of them, and ſo were the foundation of that bloody waſting war, and by ſeveral degrees promoted it, are the ſubject of this part of the Viſion, upon the ſounding of the four firſt Angels. Of this ſort was the Ægyptian Impoſtor mentioned Acts 21. 38. and more largely by Joſephus, (Ant. l. 20. c. 6. and De Bell. Jud. l. 2. c. 12. and out of him by Euſebius l. 2. c. 21.) who led after him to mount Olivet thirty thouſand men, meaning from thence to force his paſſage into Jeruſalem, and ſeize upon the Roman guards, and poſſeſs himſelf of the city, but was prevented, and diſcomfited by Felix about the end of Claudius's reign. But this is ſomewhat too early to be referr'd to here. That which ſeems moſt probable is, That theſe firſt trumpets in this chapter contain the ſpace of time from the coming of Albinus to his Præfecture, and the Jews ſufferings under him, then under Geſſius Florus his ſucceſſor, as alſo the ſpoiling of Galilee by Seſtius Gallus Prefect of Syria, to which fitly follows the ſiege, and attempt of Gallus on Jeruſalem, the importance of the ſounding of the fourth trumpet. Under Albinus and Florus the Jews were much grieved and provoked, and brake out into ſeditions: ſee Joſeph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. and De Bell. Jud. l. 2. c. 13. and ſo forward. Upon this the war began in the ſecond year of Florus's Procuratorſhip, in the twelfth of Nero, ſaith Joſephus, Ant. l. 20. in the laſt chapter. This Florus having exerciſed much cruelty on the Jews in Cæſarea, on occaſion of a ſedition there (De Bell. Jud. l. 2. c. 25.) cometh with an army to Jeruſalem, kills a great many, takes and ſcourges many of the beſt and nobleſt of the Jews, and hangs them up. They of Jeruſalem ſend their complaints to the Governor of Syria, Seſtius Gallus; he ſends Politian to ſee how it fared with them; Politian meets King Agrippa coming from Alexandria, enters Jeruſalem with him, ſees and returns an account to Seſtius Gallus, upon which they hope for relief from him, but in vain. King Agrippa makes an Oration to quiet them, and perſwade them patience, ſubjection to the Romans, and obedience to Florus, till the Emperor ſhould ſend another in his ſtead: Upon this Oration they break out violently againſt the King, reproach him, and drive him out of the city. About the ſame time they ſeize upon the fort called Maſſada, kill the Romans and put in a garriſon of their own; and Eleazar ſon of Annas the high-prieſt rejects the Emperor's ſacrifices, and refuſeth to offer them according as was wont. The chief men, and all that loved peace, betook themſelves to the upper city; the forces of the Seditious ſeized on the lower and the Temple, from thence brake in upon the upper, burnt the High-Prieſt's houſe, and King Agrippa's palace, took the tower call'd Antonia, kill'd all the garriſon of ſoldiers there. At the ſame time there is a great ſlaughter of Jews in Cæſarea, and the Jews over all Syria riſe up againſt the people of the Country, and great ſlaughters are committed on both ſides, Joſ. l. 2. De Bell. Jud. c. 13, &c.

This occaſions Seſtius his coming with a great army into Paleſtine, and after the deſtroying ſome towns of the Jews, he beſieges Jeruſalem at the feaſt of Tabernacles. This ſiege of Jeruſalem being the cloſe of what befel the Jews, by reaſon of the Seditious, may moſt fitly be reſolved on to be the interpretation of the ſmiting the third part of the Sun, Moon and Stars, ſo as to darken them, and diminiſh the luſtre both of day and night, which are all but phraſes to ſignifie a preſſure, and a ſad condition which befel Jeruſalem. But becauſe the city was not to be taken by this ſiege, but by the eſpecial providence of God, Seſtius againſt all reaſon, παραλογώτατα, ſaith Joſephus, raiſed this ſiege, by that means to give opportunity to the believers to obey Chriſt's directions, Luke 20. 21. and to fly out of Judæa to the mountains, and withal, to make the judgment far * more terrible on the reſt, (by the famine that after followed) than it would have been if it had at this time been taken (as eaſily it might have been) therefore follows in this point of time, moſt fitly, the Angels flying through the midſt of heaven, v. 13. and crying, Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of Judæa, by reaſon of the other voices of the trumpets of the three Angels which are ready to ſound. Upon which, ſaith Joſephus, before the coming of the fatal final ſiege, πολλοὶ τῶν ἐπιφανῶν Ἰουδαίων ὥσπερ βαπτιζομένης νεὼς ἀπενήχοντο τὴν πόλεως, many of the eminenter Jews, as from a ſhip ready to ſink, ſwam out of the city. Thus ſaith Euſebius, l. 3. c. 5. that there was an Oracle, or Prophecy, delivered to the δόκιμοι, the good men, or Chriſtians, that they ſhould go out of the city before the war ſhould rage, and go to Pella; and ſo Epiphanius De pond. & menſ. that before the city ſhould be taken by the Romans, μετεχρηματίσθησ ὑπ' ἀγγέλε πάντες οἱ μαθηταὶ, all the believers were warn'd by an angel (as here it is an angel flying) to go out of the city, which was now ready to be utterly deſtroyed.

Εκλήφη τὸ τέταρτον τῦ ἡλίε.

* See note on c. 9. a.

Ib. Green graſs.] What is here diſtinctly meant by the green graſs, χόρτος χλωρὸς, can be but conjectured; and that perhaps will be beſt done by comparing it with Ezek. 20. 47. where God's judgments are deſcribed by a fire, (as here) falling and devouring every green tree, and every dry. What is the meaning of this, appears, ch. 21. 3. I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked; where the righteous are evidently deſcribed by the green, as the wicked by the dry tree. Thus Luke 23. 31. it proverbially ſignifies, If they do theſe things in a green tree, what ſhall be done in a dry? If the righteous ſcape ſo hardly, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinners appear? And the elegance and ſignificancy lying not in that of the tree, but of the greenneſs, that doth as fitly hold in the graſs, as the tree. And thus it is clearly uſed, c. 9. 4. where the graſs and green thing and tree are oppoſed to thoſe that have not the ſeal of God in their foreheads, and ſo are the righteous oppoſed to the impenitent, and particularly the Chriſtians in Judæa, on whom the violence of theſe tumults and ſeditions fell heavily, as thoſe which were hated by the Jews, and which would not take up arms with them, and join their ſeditious practices.

d. χλωρὸς χόρτος.

V. 8. Third part of the ſea became blood.] That the tumults and rebellions of the ſeditious are here repreſented by theſe three firſt Angels, is more manifeſt than what thoſe ſeditions particularly were which are denoted by each of them. Our Saviour ſaith of theſe times, that many ſhould ariſe, and deceive many; and the event hath confirmed it. At every turn ſome or other aroſe and uudertook to lead them out, and nothing is to be met with in the ſtories of theſe times but the raiſing of ſeditions among the Jews, and the coming of the Romans to ſuppreſs them. And therefore it is not needful to diſtribute theſe ſeveral repreſentations of the three firſt trumpets, and apply them ſeverally, but to underſtand them in groſs of this matter. Yet ſuppoſing (what hath been ſhew'd, Note b. on c. 7.) that the ſea here (noting the ſea or lake of Tiberias) may ſignifie Galilee, it will be commodious enough to underſtand this of that ſedition raiſed in Galilee, which Veſpaſian was by Nero ſent to quell about the year of

Chriſt 69. in the twelfth of Nero. At which time, ſaith Boronius out of Joſephus, he ſubdued the Galileans, Gentem fortiſſimam, totius Palæſtinæ potentiſſimum & munitiſſimam, the moſt valiant, powerful and beſt fortified country of all Paleſtine. Which action of his being ſo conſiderable and remarkable for the ſlaughter of above an hundred thouſand, and the carrying above forty thouſand Jews captive, may fitly be here repreſented under the third part of the ſea becoming blood, and the dying of the third part of the creatures, that is, Jews, in the ſea, that is of Galilee, and the third part of the ſhips, that is, of the cities, which are to a country as ſhips to a ſea, the places wherein men live and traffick, and wherein they are fortified againſt enemies, as by ſhips againſt the violence of the ſea. And this ſlaughter falling upon the whole region of Galilee, and not only on the cities thereof, may probably be meant by the Viſion that follows the ſounding of the third Angel alſo, the ſtar that burnt, and fell upon the rivers and fountains, which are to the ſea as towns and villages to the cities, and of which a third part became wormwood, v. 11. And if that be neceſſary to define who it was who is deſcribed by the great ſtar from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, it may fitly be affirmed to be Joſephus the ſon of Mattathias, the leader of thoſe of Jotopata; but this not perſonally, but he and his forces together, who made a very valiant reſiſtance to Veſpaſian's army, but by doing ſo brought great ſlaughters upon them, as is particularly and exactly ſet down by Joſephus, l. 3. De Bell. Jud.

f. Ἄψινθος.

V. 11. Wormwood.] Wormwood is in Scripture ſometimes uſed to expreſs that which infecteth others, infuſing its bitterneſs into them; and ſo it may ſignifie any impoſtor that ſeduceth and draws others after him, as many of thoſe ſeditious Captains did to their deſtruction. Sometimes it is uſed to ſignifie any bitter effect, any heavy calamity: and ſo here it may ſignifie alſo theſe tumults of the ſeditious bringing great ſlaughters on Judæa, as appears by Joſephus's ſtory, De Bell. Jud. l. 2, and 3.

g. Ἥλιος, σελήνη & ἀστέρες.

V. 12. Third part of the ſun was ſmitten, and the——] That the Temple is deſcribed and expreſſed generally in the Scripture by an hoſt, hath been formerly ſhewed, Note on 1 Tim. 1. f. That this hoſt is in Viſions or Prophetical dark repreſentations fitly expreſs'd by the Sun, Moon and Stars, will be eaſily conſented to, when we but remember that thoſe are called the hoſt of heaven, and that the Temple is commonly a repreſentation of heaven, and ſometimes repreſented by it (ſee ver. 1.) and accordingly the Chriſtian Church is called the Kingdom of Heaven oft-times in the Goſpel. Then that the particulars of Sun, Moon and Stars are ſeverally mention'd, rather than the heaven the aggregate body, is by that ordinary manner of ſpeaking among the Hebrews, which expreſs the whole by enumeration of the ſeveral parts of it (ſee Note on 2 Pet. 3. e.) And ſo here it may poſſibly denote the ſervice of the Temple, which was performed by night, (ye that by night ſtand in the courts of God, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, the watches being then kept) as well as by day, which is here alſo mention'd by ἡ νὺξ the night, as well as ἡμέρα the day; which could not ſeverally have been mention'd, had not the Sun for the day, and the Moon and ſtars for the night, been accordingly mention'd alſo. And if this be it, then when 'tis ſaid, that the third part of theſe was ſmitten, the meaning muſt be, that an heavy diſtreſs now fell upon the Temple, and the ſervice of God there was ſhrewdly diſturbed by this ſiege, but not (at this part of the Viſion) wholly deſtroyed. But beſides this there is another interpretation, of which the words are more clearly capable, ſo as the Sun ſignifie the Temple, the Moon the City, and the Stars all the people, and all together the whole nation, (as in Joſeph's prophetick dream, the Sun, Moon and Stars are all the family of Jacob) againſt which here the woes are denounced v. 13. according to the words in Joſephus, Woe, woe to the city, and the people, and the Temple (ſee Note h.) And this ſeems the more probable interpretation. See Mat. 24. Note n.

h. Ἀγγέλου εἰ μεσουρανήματι, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ.

V. 13. Woe, woe, woe,] Concerning this Angel flying in the midſt of heaven, and crying with a loud voice, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τ γῆς, Woe, woe, woe to the dwellers in the land, the ſtory is remarkable in Joſephus (and out of him in Euſebius l. 3. c. 8'.) which he ſets down as a prodigy, preſaging that deſtruction of the Jews: There was, ſaith he, one Jeſus, ſon of Ananias, a country-man of mean birth, four years before the war againſt the Jews, at a time when all was in deep peace and tranquility, who coming up to the feaſt of tabernacles, according to the cuſtom, began on a ſudden to cry out, and ſay, φωνὴ ἀπ' ἀνατολῆς, &c. a voice from the Eaſt, a voice from the Weſt, a voice from the four winds, a voice againſt Jeruſalem and the Temple, a voice againſt bridegrooms and brides, a voice againſt all the people. Thus he went about all the narrow lanes, crying night and day, and being apprehended and ſcourged, he ſtill continued the ſame language under the blows without any other word. And they on this ſuppoſing (as it was) δαιμονιώτερον τὸ κίνημα πάνδεις, that it was ſome divine motion, brought him to the Roman Præfect: and by his appointment being with whips wounded, and his fleſh torn to the bones, he neither intreated, nor ſhed tear, but to every blow, in a moſt lamentable mournful note, cryed out, οὐαί, οὐαί, Ἱεροσολύμοις, Woe, woe to Jeruſalem. This he continued to do till the time of the ſiege, ſeven years together; and at laſt, to do his ordinary note of Woe to the city, the people, the temple, adding, Woe alſo to me, a ſtone from the battlements fell down and kill'd him. To this I ſhall add no more, but that ἡ γῆ the land here being the land of Judæa, the phraſe κατοικοῦντες γῆν, inhabitants of the land is as truly agreeable to the Jews, as οὐαὶ and οὐαί are all one alſo. 'Tis only farther obſervable, that theſe prophetick woes are here ſaid to be three, and thoſe inflicted and brought upon the people by that which is repreſented by the voices of the trumpets of the three Angels ſtill behind, the firſt mentioned as paſt, ch. 9. 12. the ſecond and third, ch. 11. 14. ſee note on ch. 11. e. And ſo what is here repreſented in this part of the Viſion, is but the ſetting down of this prophecy, which Jeſus the ſon of Ananias ſhould deliver concerning the judgments, and not the judgment themſelves, which follow in the ſucceeding chapters. And ſo 'tis more perfectly parallel to that paſſage out of Joſephus and Euſebius, which was a σημεῖον, or prodigie, to fore-ſignifie that deſtruction, and not the deſtruction it ſelf.

CHAP. IX.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1. And upon the ſounding of the fifth trumpet, I ſaw him that was before, (c. 8. 10.) the leader of the ſeditious, or ſome other that ſucceeded in his place, and he became a ring-leader of moſt helliſh villanies, which under the title of Zelots did all the miſchief imaginable.

1. AND the fifth angel ſounded, and I ſaw * a a ſtar fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the † bottomleſs pit.]

2. And they marched up to Jeruſalem, and ſeized upon the temple there, kill'd the high Prieſts, and the reſt of the Prieſts, and plunder'd the city.

2. And he opened the bottomleſs pit, and there aroſe a ſmoak out of the pit, as the ſmoak of a great * furnace; and the ſun and the air were darkned by reaſon of the ſmoak of the pit.]

3. And theſe became as Locuſts, great waſters and devourers, and were in other reſpects peculiarly like Locuſts, which having no King, go out by bands, Prov. 30. 27. and ſuch were theſe, a company of giddy wild people, in great numbers, haraſſing and devouring all.

3. And there came out of the ſmoak Locuſts † upon the earth, and unto them was given power, as the * Scorpions of the earth have power.]

* The ſtar that was fallen from heaven on the land.

† Well of the abyſs, φρέατος τ ἀβύσσου.

* Chimney, καμίνου.

† Into the land, εἰς τὴν γῆν.

* Scorpions have power of the land, ἐξουσίαν ἔχουσιν οἱ σκορπίοι τ γῆς.

4. And

† Said.

4. And it b was † commanded them that they ſhould not hurt the graſs of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only thoſe men which have not the ſeal of God in their foreheads.

4. But by God's providence diſpoſing for the good of his ſervants, ſo it was, that this judgment of the Zelots fell not upon the Chriſtians, (ſee note on c. 8. d.) but only upon the Jews themſelves (that were as contrary to Chriſtianity, as any) only becauſe they were not of the faction of thoſe Zelots. b.

5. And to them it was given that they ſhould not kill them, but that they ſhould be c tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a Scorpion, when he ſtriketh a man.]

5. And the judgment that fell upon the Jews by theſe men, was not ſo much a down-right killing (though that alſo befel Annas and the Prieſts, ſee note a.) as plundering and pillaging and undoing them, and tearing their neceſſary food from the beſt citizens of Jeruſalem, and thus continuing for five months ſpace, 'till Titus came to beſiege the city, by which means the ſiege became much the more cruel and intolerable when it came: and ſo this was moſt fitly compared to ſcorpions, as the whipping with them is the moſt cruel and terrible infliction, much more cruel than any other ſcourge, 1 Kings 12. 11. c.

6. And in thoſe days ſhall men d ſeek death, and ſhall not find it; and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them.]

6. This brought a great famine and want on the greateſt and richeſt men, and that is far more miſerable than death it ſelf (ſee note on c. 6. a.) d.

* As it were crowns like unto gold, ὡς στέφανοι ὅμοιοι χρυσῷ.

7. And the ſhapes of the locuſts were like unto horſes prepared to battel; and on their heads * were as it were crowns of gold; and their faces were as the faces of men.]

7. And theſe devouring waſters, the Zelots, were in appearance like warriers, and pretended themſelves to be redeemers of the people, and counter-conquerors of the Romans (which is meant by their Crowns like unto Gold, falſe Princes, falſe Patriots) and they took upon them to be Saviours and Benefactors, like men, kind and friendly, when they wrought all this ruine to their brethren.

8. And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.]

8. And all this while theſe that thus devoured and preyed upon all they came near, and ſo were moſt terrible to thoſe that could not reſiſt, were moſt baſe cowardly perſons theſe great plunderers, far from having any manlineſs or valour in them.

9. And they had breaſt-plates as it were breaſt-plates of iron; and the ſound of their wings was as the ſound of chariots of many horſes running to battel.]

9. And they were hard-hearted, compaſſionleſs people, and in great troops like graſs-hoppers or locuſts they flew about, and made all places reſound with their noiſe, and at the news of them, Joel 2. 5.

10. And they had tails like unto ſcorpions, and there were ſtings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.]

10. And as ſcorpions wound and ſting with their tails, ſo they coming in with fair pretences of Saviours and Benefactors, when they depart, plunder and carry all along with them, and ſo they continue till the time of Titus ſiege, v. 5. juſt five months ſpace.

11. And they had a king over them, which is the Angel of the bottomleſs pit, whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name e Apollyon.]

11. And though they diſclaim having any King over them but God, and upon that ſcore pretend to riſe up againſt the Romans, and though like Locuſts v. 3. they go out by bands, having no King to conduct them, yet their cruelty and unmercifulneſs in deſtroying owns them to have a King, who rules among them, and puts them upon all this villany, Satan that delights in nothing but deſtroying. e.

12. † One woe is paſt, and behold there come two woes more * hereafter.]

12. And this is the firſt of thoſe woes or peſts foretold c. 8. 13. And though this were a competent judgment on that nation, there are yet two more approaching them.

* After theſe μετὰ ταῦτα.

13. And the ſixth Angel ſounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar, which is before God,]

13. And upon the ſounding of the ſixth trumpet of the ſixth Angel, I heard a voice from the altar of incenſe, where the prayers of the Saints or conſtant Chriſtians are ſaid to be offered up, c. 8. 3. noting that the prayers of the exil'd Chriſtians (that to avoid this deſtruction were departed to Pella, and many other places out of the land, and prayed for liberty to return to their country again) were come up before God, and in mercy to them, the ſiege of Jeruſalem, that now follows, was haſtned.

† At, ἐπὶ.

14. Saying to the ſixth Angel which had the trumpet, Looſe the four Angels which are bound † in the great river f Euphrates.]

14. And methought that voice ſaid to this ſixth Angel, that he ſhould take off that reſtraint cauſed by the preſent affairs at Rome, and by the great changes there, which detained Veſpaſian from ſetting upon Jeruſalem according to his purpoſe. f.

15. And the four Angels were looſed, which were prepared for an hour and a day and a month and a year, for to ſlay the third part of men.]

15. And ſo they were let looſe from that reſtraint, that is, permitted by the condition of Affairs to march into Judæa, for which they were before ready, but had by the providence of God interpoſing ſome hindrances, as he thought fit, been kept for this point of time, to a day (as we ſay) which God hath determined as moſt agreeable to all his purpoſes of ſaving ſome, and deſtroying the reſt.

16. And the number of the army of the horſe-men were two hundred thouſand thouſand, and I heard the number of them.]

16. And methought their armies of horſe-men were preſently muſtered, and the number of them found to be infinite and unimaginable, the Syrians, Arabians, Itureans, &c. in vaſt numbers aſſociating themſelves unto them.

* Fiery, and blue, and like brimſtone, πυρίνους, ὑακινθίνους, καὶ θειώδεις.

17. And thus I ſaw the horſes in the viſion, and them that ſat on them, having g breaſt-plates * of fire, and of Jacinth, and brimſtone: and the heads of the horſes were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths iſſued fire and ſmoak and brimſtone.]

17. And theſe troops of horſe or horſe-men were repreſented to me with breaſt-plates ſhining like flaming fire, and their aſpect moſt terrible, like that of Lions gaping, and flaming fire iſſuing out of their mouths. Or elſe the front of this Army, noted by their breaſt-plates and heads, were very formidable. g.

18. By theſe three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the ſmoak, and by the brimſtone which iſſued out of their mouths.]

18. And a multitude of the Jews were killed by them in their paſſage through the country.

19. For their power is in their mouth and in their tails: for their tails were like unto ſerpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.]

19. And the rear of this Army was as terrible as the front, came after waſting and deſtroying, as the front had done, v. 18. And ſo the whole army was like that kind of ſerpent which hath an head in the tail, and wounds as dangerouſly with that as with the other.

20. And the reſt of the men which were not killed by theſe plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they ſhould not worſhip devils, and idols of gold, and ſilver, and braſs, and ſtone, and of wood, which neither can ſee, nor hear, nor walk:]

20. And though many of the inhabitants were deſtroyed by this means, yet were not they that eſcaped, nor the Gnoſticks among them, that had aſſociated with the Jews againſt the Chriſtians (and were many of them now deſtroyed with them) reformed by all this; that yet repented not of their Idol-worſhip, which they took for an indifferent thing, but rather grew worſe and worſe.

21. Neither repented they of their murthers, nor of their ſorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their theefts.]

21. And went on impenitently in all their bloodineſs that they had been guilty of upon the Chriſtians, their ſorceries, (ſee note on Gal. 5. d.) yea and their abominable uncleanneſſes and rapines; they were no whit the better for all that had yet befall'n them.

Annotations

a. Ἀστὴρ πεπτωκώς.

V. 1. A Star fall.] For the underſtanding of this enſuing chapter, and the interpretation of the other parts of this Viſion upon the ſounding of theſe other Angels, it will be uſeful to take the riſe from the ἀστὴρ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεπτωκώς, the ſtar which had fallen from heaven, for ſo πεπτωκώς ſignifies in the Præter, not Preſent tenſe. This in all reaſon muſt relate to ch. 8. v. 10. where we read ἔπεσεν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀστὴρ μέγας, there fell from heaven a great ſtar: who that was, was defined moſt probably ch. 8. Note e. viz. the army of the στασιασταὶ or ſeditious under Joſeph the ſon of Mattathias, that defended themſelves againſt Veſpaſian in the city Jotapata. For from theſe ſprang the ζηλωτὰι Zelots, ſo much ſpoken of Joſephus, the fore-runners and haſtners of the woes foretold in the end of the laſt Chapter, and which made the latter ſiege ſo extremely miſerable, and are now the ſubject of the Viſions of this chapter. For it is briefly obſervable out of Joſephus, that (as Galilee had the firſt and principal of Chriſt's miracles afforded them, ſo) that region was to have their firſt part in the deſtruction. This was done in a moſt ſad manner by Veſpaſian in the 12th of Nero, (ſee ch. 8. Note e.) and finiſhed at the taking of Jotapata. At which time they that eſcaped the Romans ſword, ran in vaſt numbers to Jeruſalem, and being gotten into the city, helped to devour the proviſion laid in for the maintenance of the city, and not only ſo, but plunder'd them in a moſt horrible manner. Theſe coming under the pretence of great zeal to the law of God, and cuſtoms of their country, were called Zelots; and theſe betook themſelves into the Temple, as a place beſt fortified; and the High-prieſt Annas ſtirring up the people againſt them, great ſlaughters were committed on both ſides. The Zelots called the Edumæans to their aid: Annas commands the gates to be ſhut againſt them: they getting in in a tempeſtuous night join with the Zelots, and both of them together kill a great multitude, Annas himſelf, and the reſt of the Prieſts, and caſt their bodies out in the ſtreet without burial. And at length the Edumæans, diſliking and deteſting the cruelty of the Zelots, returned to their own country. The Zelots they continue to make havock, pillage and deſtroy, ſet guards, that none might go out of the city, and ſo beſiege and ſhut them up before the enemy comes, and in fine, are the foreſt enemies to the city of Jeruſalem that they ever felt, and cauſed the ſiege that attended to be then much more cruel, the famine more ſharp, and the deſtruction more terrible, then it could have been if Seſtius Gallus had continued the ſiege and taken them. And to make the condition yet more unhappy, whilſt theſe Zelots raged ſo within the city, the Sicarii were as unruly without; and ſo as it was moſt unſafe to remain within, becauſe of the Zelots, ſo in caſe they made any ſhift to get out of it they fell into the hands of the cut-throats, under John, who deſiring to ſet himſelf up for a King, ſpoil'd and ſlaughter'd all, and at laſt was by the Zelots advanced and ſet over them.

b. Ἐρρέθη αὐτοῖς

V. 4. Was commanded them.] That ἐρρέθη, it was ſaid, is a proper word to ſignifie a command of God's, appears by Mat. 5. where the precepts of the Decalogue are ſet down in this phraſe, ἐρρέθη ἀρχαίοις, it was ſaid to them of old. Now all the wiſe and gracious acts of God's providence, in protecting his ſervants, and reſtraining the malice of their enemies, is the moſt properly thus expreſs'd, his will being of the ſame force to produce the effects as his commands ought to be. And accordingly that is here meant, that by God's wiſe diſpoſal ſo it was, that in the judgments that fell upon Jeruſalem by the Zelots, the Chriſtians ſuffered not: For upon Seſtius Gallus's raiſing his ſiege we know the Chriſtians went out of Jeruſalem, and fled to Pella, (ſee Note on ch. 8. c.) and ſo when the Zelots came to Jeruſalem, immediately before the ſiege by Titus, the Chriſtians were gone out of their way, and all their violence fell on the unbelieving Jews, which accordingly continued there. And theſe are expreſs'd by the phraſe, οἵτινες οὐκ ἔχουσι τὴν σφραγῖδα τοῦ θεοῦ, as many as had not the ſeal of God on their foreheads (ſee ch. 7. c.) as the Chriſtians by χόρτον, and πᾶν χλοερὸν, and δένδρον, the graſs, and every green thing, and every tree, (ſee Note on ch. 8 d.). οἵτινες οὐκ ἔχουσι τὴν σφραγῖδα τοῦ θεοῦ. χόρτον.

V. 5. Tormented.] The famine, which the plundering of the Zelots was to produce, is here very fitly expreſs'd by βασανίζεσθαι, being tortured, as that is oppoſite to ἀποκτένεσθαι, killing, becauſe famine, as the torture, is a lingring racking death, doth not diſpatch men eaſily or quickly, as the ſword doth, but (as it were breaking one limb after another) tearing off the fleſh from the bones, conſuming and emaciating them. And indeed of the time of the ſiege, it is literally affirmed by Euſebius out of Joſephus, that theſe Zelots or Seditious Jews in Jeruſalem, tearing every man's victuals from him, δεινὰς βασάνων ὁδοὺς ἐπινόουν περὶ ἑρεύναν τροφῆς, l. 3. c. 6. invented cruel ways of torture to find out food, when it was concealed from them by the poſſeſſors, or on conceit that it was concealed where indeed it was not. And he mentions ſome of their inventions of torment, Θεσβοῖς ἐμφράττοντες τοῖς ἀθλίοις τῶν αἰδοίων τὰς πόρους, ῥάβδοις τ' ὀξείαις ἀναπείραντες τὰς ἕδρας, &c. A moſt horrible cruelty not fit to be tranſlated: and, ſaith he, τὸ φρικτὸ καὶ ἀκοαῖς, 'twas terrible even to hear what ſome men ſuffered, to make them confeſs but one loaf of bread, when they had no more, perhaps not that. Theſe he ordinarily ſtyles there οἱ βασανισταὶ, the tormentors; and ſo that makes this repreſentation here the more proper, and fit to expreſs this matter of their plundering. c. Βασανίζεσθαι.

V. 6. Seek death.] That which is here ſaid, that men ſhall ſeek death, and ſhall not find it, is a moſt proper expreſſion of a lingring tormenting death, and ſo of a famine, (which is moſt eminently ſuch) and of ſuch vaſtations and plunderings which leave men life, but nothing to ſupport or ſuſtain it; and ſuch was the effect of the cruelty of theſe Zelots at this time. The very thing here ſaid is after, in the time of the ſiege, ſet down by way of ſtory or relation of the fact by Euſebius, l. 3. c. 6. out of Joſephus. That when the στασιασταὶ, or ſeditious, were ſo laviſh of their ſwords, that they would kill men, run them through, only δοκιμῆς χάριν τοῦ σιδήρου, to try their ſwords, or to keep them in ure; yet τοὺς ἰκετεύοντας χεῖρά τινι σφίσι δεξιὰν καὶ ξίφος, τοῦ λιμοῦ κρείττονα ἀποφαινοῦντες, when any being ready to famiſh deſired them to lend them their hand and their ſword, to put them out of their pain, they through arrogance and ſcorn of their miſeries rejected their beſeechings, and left them to the famine to uſe them more cruelly. d. Ζητήσουσι θάνατον.

V. 11. Apollyon.] That Apollyon here ſignifies the Devil, is apparent by what is affirmed of him in the former part of this verſe, that it is the Angel of the bottomleſs pit. And accordingly the famous God of the Heathens called Apollo (a word ſo lightly changed from this) muſt be reſolved to be the Devil, this deſtroying Angel, as he is oft called in Scripture, imployed altogether in deſtructions and miſchiefs. To which purpoſe the 12 chap. of lib. 5. of A. Gellius is worth conſidering, where having taken notice of two ancient names of Heathen Gods, Dijovis and Vejovis, and having deduced the former from an Original which ſignifies benigne or helpful, he determines the latter to belong to a God qui non juvandi poteſtatem, ſed vim nocendi haberet, which had not the power of helping, but the force of doing miſchief; adding that the image of this God is found to have Arrows in the hand, prepared for ſlaughters and deſtructions; and therefore Apollo is thought to be ſignified by that title. To which purpoſe, ſaith he, it is conſiderable, that Virgil, a man very greatly ſkilled in ancient knowledge, doth in his Georgicks, deprecate Numina læva, the unlucky, or hurtful, deities; ſignifying thereby e. Απολλύων.

quandam vim esse ejusmodi Deorum in lædendo magis quam juvando potentem, that such kind of Gods had the virtue, or faculty, of hurting, but not of helping any; and of them Apollo is the only one named there, by that Poet, who must be sacrificed to, to avert any evils from them.

f. Εὐφράτης. V. 14. Euphrates.] What is here meant by Euphrates is somewhat uncertain. It may signifie literally that known river; for it is said by Josephus, l. 5. c. 6. that the Syrian Legions of the Roman army lay as far as Euphrates; and Philo in his Embassy mentions στρατόπεδα πρὸς Εὐφράτῃ, the Armies reaching to Euphrates. But in the style of these Visions it may also signifie somewhat else: For the River Euphrates, we know, is that which runs through Babylon, and so that great river is fitly set to denote that city, as we ordinarily find Tyber to be used for Rome, the Sea for Galilee the Region which it belongs to, and many the like. Now that Babylon in these Visions signifies Rome heathen, will be hereafter shewn, Note on c. 18. a. And so ἐπὶ Εὐφράτῃ may signifie (not in, but) at, or about Rome, which being the Seat of the Empire, the great changes and affairs concerning the Empire are fitly expres'd by this phrase; and so we shall see Euphrates used c. 16. 12. for the city of Rome. Next it must be remembred, that the Angels being the Officers and Ministers of God, to execute his will, to inflict punishments, &c. the Roman commanders under Vespasian, that were such instruments in destroying Jerusalem, are accordingly call'd his Angels. And so frequently this destruction of Jerusalem is expres'd by Christ's coming with his Angels, visiting with or by these officers or instruments of his. And of these, it seems, there were four principal ones; or else this certain number is used for an uncertain, as the fourth and third part of the land are not to be thought that proportion exactly measured or numbred. Lastly, the binding of these Angels must signifie the detaining or stopping of them from doing that work. And so the plain meaning of this verse will be, that upon occasion of the affairs of the Roman Empire, the Roman armies were stopt a while from their purpose of besieging Jerusalem. And thus it is evident in the story. When the Zelots, after Vespasian's subduing of Galilee, fled riotously into Jerusalem, and wrought those mischiefs there, (set down in the former part of this Chapter,) and Vespasian seeing the Jews by their civil broils destroy one another, he made no great haste to set about the siege till some multitudes that fled out of Jerusalem came and besought him, that he would in meer pity come and take them, and rescue them from this scourge of Scorpions, the Zelots. Vespasian upon this prepared to go up against Jerusalem with all his forces; but (which is the thing here foretold) hearing of the death of the Emperor, defer'd this expedition, saith Josephus de Bell. Jud. l. 5. c. 6. expecting to see how the Empire would be disposed of. And not only so, but Mutianus President of Syria, and a chief Promoter of Vespasian to the Empire, went out from Syria with a great body of horse and foot into Italy, and came to Rome with them the next day after Vitellius was conquered and slain; see Josephus De Bell. l. 5. c. μά. Titus also and Agrippa were sent to Rome, saith Baronius, Anno Ch. 70. in fine. And * so Tacitus as well as Josephus saith that Titus was sent by Vespasian from Syria to Rome, to congratulate Galba's promotion to the Empire, and receive directions about Judæa; but hearing of his death as he went, returned to Syria. And in brief, the changes being so great and many after the death of Nero, and no settlement in the Empire, (Galba, Otho, Vitellius coming all to the Empire and parting with it again in so short a time) it is Josephus's observation, that the Roman armies remained in suspence what to do, (that is the meaning of δεδεμένοι bound here) and neglected their affairs in Judæa, thinking it unseasonable to attempt other nations when there were such disquiets at home, Jos. De Bell. l. 5. c. κη'. But within a while, Vitellius being kill'd, and his party overcome, Vespasian is chosen Emperor, being then at Alexandria in Ægypt: And the Empire being soon confirmed on him, he immediately betakes himself to the finishing his business in Judæa, having seasonably concluded his affairs in Ægypt, and so sends his son Titus with select forces to besiege Jerusalem; which is here meant by the loosing of the four Angels that were bound, that is, detained by that former occasion. Upon which here follows immediately (as it did in the history) the marching of the Army toward Jerusalem.

Λῦσον τοὺς τέσσαρας ἀγγέλους.

g. Θώρακας πυρίνους. V. 17. Breast-plates of fire.] What is here said of the breast-plates, or armour, and the several colours of it may be thought to be interpretable literally, in respect of the several nations of which this army consisted, distinguish'd purposely by the colour of their armour, for such ways of differencing the soldiers are ordinary and useful in armies: or it may possibly denote no more than that they were of steel, which is observed to cast divers colours. But yet thirdly, these three colours may be set (as in prophetick style it is ordinary) only to describe a terrible appearance: for such is best, and most commonly represented by a flaming consuming fire (as when God in his judgments is so called, Heb. 12. 29. and his Angels as executioners of his wrath are called a flaming fire, Heb. 1. 7.) and such do these three colours make up, the lower part being of the colour of amber, ch. 1. 15. and here πυρινος, fire-colour, the next part of the flame, blue, and the uppermost of all, pale, or of the colour of brimstone (see Note on c. 1. f.) And so in the greatest flames 'tis ordinary to be seen. And then it is agreeable to the Hebrew style, to express one thing by the enumeration of the severals that make it up (see 2 Pet. 3. d.) the flaming fire by these three parts of it. And so this may be the meaning of the whole phrase. This army, the captains whereof are called Angels, v. 14. came in a most dreadful, formidable appearance, like a flaming consuming fire. And to the same purpose all the following expressions may be expounded. Their heads were like the heads of lions; which sure signifies no more, but they looked very terribly, as we know lions heads are the most frightful part of that dreadful beast, especially when they gape: to which the next part of the description may relate, Out of their mouths cometh out fire, and smoak, and brimstone, that is, flaming fire again; for the smoak here is all one with the blue above (the colour of smoak) as the fire and brimstone are again repeated here. As a lion gaping or yawning from his prey, and the blood of it about his mouth, looks very dismally, the bloodiness and fierceness of his countenance is as if a flaming fire, or fire and smoak and brimstone, came out of his mouth. 'Tis not impossible indeed that by the likeness of fire and smoak and brimstone coming out of their mouths might be signified fire-balls, or granado's, or such like instruments of firing cities, then in use: and so saith Valerius Flaccus of Titus besieging Jerusalem,

Πύρινοι, ὑακινθινοι, θειώδεις.

Κεφαλαὶ ὡς λεόντων.

ἐκ τῶν στομάτων πῦρ, &c. Καπνός.

Spargentemque faces, & in omni turre furentem, that he threw fire-brands, or balls, into the city, and set the towers on fire. But this part of the Vision being the setting down the march of the army, not yet set down before the city, or displaying their fire-balls, the phrases will not so probably be appliable to that, and so may perhaps signifie no more than the terribleness of their appearances as they past: And then to that also may belong all that follows, as first, that by these three plagues ver. 18. the third part of men were killed, that is, by this fire and smoak and brimstone going out of their mouths, that is, by this formidable, dismal army, as by a flaming fire, consisting of those three parts, a great multitude of the Jews were slain in their passage through the country. And so again v. 19. Their power is in their mouth, and in their tails. For though it is possible again, that by the mouth and the tail may be meant the horsemen and, for expedition sake, a foot-man took up behind every one of them (to which which will alſo be appliable to that which follows, that their tails had heads, and with them they do hurt, that is, theſe foot-men ſet down from the horſes were able to fight alſo, and indeed were the moſt miſchievous;) yet it is very reaſonable to expound that alſo more groſly, that this army cannot better be expreſs'd than by a poiſonous killing ſerpent, that particularly call'd amphisbæna, which hath an head at each end, and ſo can equally wound by either: which being applied to the whole army, and not to each horſe-man in it, will denote the two parts of the army, a front and a rear; the former before deſcribed, v. 17, 18. very terrible in their march, and making great ſlaughters; and then both of them together, v. 19. that their tail is as formidable as their head, their rear as their front, and in reſpect of both together they are like that ſerpent which hath another head in the tail, and can do as much hurt with that as with the other. What is the particular notation of each of theſe phraſes, may be ſomewhat uncertain, whether either of theſe, or whether yet ſome other rather; but for the main or all together, there is littledoubt but they make up a deſcription of the terribleneſs of that army in their march toward Jeruſalem, and the great ſlaughters on the Jews by the way thither: and that is all that is neceſſary to be known for the underſtanding the Viſion.

CHAP. X.

Paraphraſe.

1. Upon the multiplying of theſe ſins c. 9. 21. and impenitent continuing in all their provocations, it was juſt with God to proceed, as now he appeared to me in a viſion to do; For methought I ſaw another Angel of ſpecial dignity, (ſuch as ch. 5. 2. and ch. 18. 21. deſigned and uſed for eminent imployment) coming down in a cloud from heaven (as Angels are wont to do Gods meſſages) having a rainbow on his head, either to denote a glorious appearance, as Ezech. 1. 28. or perhaps moreover (ſee c. 4. 3.) Gods covenant of mercy and deliverance, made with all his faithful ſervants, who were now to receive benefit by what ſhould fall out (ſee c. 9. 13.) but his looks or countenance were moſt terrible, and his feet, denoting his ways and preſent deſigned Actions, were moſt ſad and deſtructive, the fire noting deſtruction, and the pillars the fixneſs of the decree, the immutableneſs of it.

1. AND I ſaw another mighty Angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the ſun, and his feet as pillars of fire.]

2. And he had in his hand a roll opened, and ſo ready to be read, wherein was contained a ſentence againſt the whole nation of the Jews, (ſee note on ch. 7. 6.) a decree come out from God of utter deſtruction, and this was the completion of that prophecy, wherein 'twas ſaid that Chriſt ſhould make his enemies his footſtool, that is, ſubdue and bring them down, and that here expreſs'd by this Angel ſetting both his feet on them.

2. And he had in his hand a little book open, and he ſet his right foot upon the ſea, and his left foot upon the * earth,] * Land, γῆν.

3. And this Angel roared terribly, as a Lion doth roar after his prey, when he is in ſight of it: and upon that, as upon a call, the ſeven thunders uttered their voices, that is, methought I heard ſeven, that is, many claps of thunder, and voices coming out of them, by which the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus was ſhortly repreſented.

3. And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, [a] ſeven thunders uttered their voices.]

4. And as I had before written what I had ſeen and heard, ſo now I was about to do, to ſet down what was ſaid by thoſe Voices: but I was commanded that I ſhould not do ſo, but on the other ſide that I ſhould ſhut and ſeal them up, ſignifying them to be too terrible to be revealed (the ears of every one that heard them would tingle) and therefore fitter to be ſealed and cloſed up in ſilence, then to be recorded or ſet down, (ſuch was this deſtruction by Titus.)

4. And when the ſeven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven ſaying unto me, Seal up thoſe things which the ſeven thunders uttered, and write them not.]

5. And the Angel ver. 1. lift up his hand to heaven, as a ceremony of ſwearing, Gen. 14. 22. Deut. 32. 40. (proportionably to that which is ſaid of God concerning the provoking Iſraelites, that he ſwear in his wrath, they ſhould not enter into his reſt, (that is that they ſhould die in the wilderneſs, and not enter into Canaan) or concerning the delivering his people ont of Antiochus's hands, Dan. 12. 7.)

5. And the Angel which I ſaw ſtand upon the ſea, and upon the † earth, lifted up his hand to heaven,] † Land, γῆν.

6, 7. And with an oath by God the creator of all the world, he pronounced the ſentence, that time or delay ſhould no more be, that is that this execution of God's decree ſhould be no longer deferred, but the deſtruction, ſo long threatned, which when it came, it ſhould be a total utter deſtruction, ſhould now immediately light upon this people: A very great part of it now by Titus, and within a very little while, upon the ſounding of the ſeventh Angel, it ſhould be perfected, and ſo all thoſe prophecies be fulfilled, whereby it had been foretold both by the old Prophets, and ſince by the Prophets under the New Teſtament, to whom it had been made known by God, though when, or at what point of time, it had never been revealed to any, Mat. 24. 36. Acts 1. 7. and ſo was kept as a Miſtery.

6. And ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the ſea, and the things which are therein, that there ſhould be * [b] time no longer;

7. But in the days of the voice of the ſeventh Angel, when he ſhall † begin to ſound, the myſtery of God ſhall be finiſhed, as he hath declared to his ſervants the prophets.] * Delay.

† Be ready to ſound, μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν.

8. And that voice that ſpake to me from heaven, v. 4. again ſpake to me, and commanded me to go to that Angel, ver. 2. and beſeech him to give me the book or roll (wherein that ſentence was written.)

8. And the voice which I heard from heaven ſpake unto me again, and ſaid, Go, and take the little book which is open in the hand of the Angel, which * ſtandeth upon the ſea, and upon the † earth.] * Stood, ἑστῶτος. † Land, γῆς.

9. And I went and beſought him for it; and he gave it me, and bid me eat it, ſee Ezech. 3. 1. telling me that though it would taſt a little pleaſant in my mouth, Ezech. 3. 3. yet when 'twas in the ſtomach 'twould be very bitter: that is, that though in reſpect of the reſcue and deliverance that would befal the godly by the deſtruction of theſe enemies of theirs, and by conſideration of the great juſtice of God upon theſe that ſo well deſerved it, I ſhould, while I conſidered that alone, fully approve, and be well pleaſed with this ſentence againſt the Jews; yet when I began to ſee and conſider it in the terribleneſs of it, and in the uttter vaſtation of a glorious Temple, where God had ſo long been pleaſed to dwell, and of a people which God had taken and owned peculiarly for himſelf, it would be a moſt horrible and amazing thing to me.

9. And I went unto the Angel, and ſaid unto him, Give me the little book. And he ſaid unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it ſhall make thy belly bitter, but it ſhall be in thy mouth ſweet as honey.]

10. And I took the roll and devoured it, that is, conſidered and meditated upon it, on both parts of it, the deſtruction to the Jews, as well as the deliverances and advantages to Chriſtians; the terribleneſs of the utter deſtruction, as well as the merits of the Jews that brought it on them: and though the one pleaſed me exceedingly, yet as honey, that is ſweet to the taſt, when 'tis eaten, is very uneaſy to the ſtomach, ſo the other part, that of the deſtructions of my countrey-men the Jews, was matter of horrible grief to me.

10. And I took the little book out of the Angels hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth ſweet as honey: and as ſoon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.]

11. And when I thought with my ſelf, ſure now there is an end of the viſion concerning the Jews, there is no more to be ſeen or prophefied of the Angel ſaid unto me, that beyond this deſtruction of the Temple and Jeruſalem and Judæa under Titus, to which theſe laſt parts of the viſion belonged, there was yet more matter of prophecie belonging to this people, what ſhould yet farther betide them from the Romans (after this deſtruction) by enſuing Emperours, Adrian eſpecially, and other Kings and people, that ſhould aſſiſt him in rooting out this nation.

11. And he ſaid unto me, Thou muſt prophefie again * before [c] many people, and nations and tongues, and † kings.] * Of the people. † Many kings a. Ἑπτὰ βρονταὶ] V. 3. Seven thunders] What is meant by the seven thunders here, must be obſerved, for the clearing the whole matter. That thunders are the fitteſt expreſſions or emblems of great blows or judgments, is obvious to every man; and ſo that the number of ſeven, being a compleat number, is fitly affix'd when any fatal, ſignal blow is to be inflicted: And ſo theſe ſeven thunders here ſending forth their voices ſignify the deſtruction to which ſuch preparation was made in the former Viſions, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem under Titus. This ſo ſad and terrible, that it was not to be committed to writing, *v.*4. And this utterly irreparable, never to be made up again; which was the importance of the Angel's oath, v. 5, 6. Only ſome addition there might be made to it, and that ſhould ſoon be done, the utter deſtruction ſhould be compleated in Adrian's time, call'd the days of the voice of the ſeventh trumpet, v. 7. And that is the third and laſt woe, *c.*11.14. And that, when it came, *v.*15. ſet down in a parallel phraſe to this of the ſeven thunders, viz. ἐγένοντο φωναὶ μεγάλαι ἐν οὐρανῷ, there were great voices in heaven. For φωναὶ and βρονταὶ voices and thunders every where appear to be all one in theſe books (ſee Note on c. 11. e.) and the addition of great will have a force in it, and denote that there under Adrian, to be the completing of the deſtruction. That ſo great things as theſe two, the deſtruction under Titus, and the full meaſure under Adrian, ſhould be ſo briefly ſet down in theſe Viſions, as by theſe two phraſes, the ſeven thunders uttering their voices, and there were great voices, or thunders, in heaven, will not ſeem ſtrange, if firſt it be obſerved that the few words, ſeven thunders and great voices, have great force in them, as great as any circumlocution of words could expreſs; and ſo we know the one ſingle γέγονε, it was, c.16.17. is the deſcription of the deſtruction of heathen Rome, and accordingly the Latin word Fuit, it hath been, or 'tis gone, is full an expreſſion of an utter deſtruction of Troy, or any the moſt famous city or people, as can be: and 2*ly*, if it be remembred what pomp had been formerly uſed in the foregoing Chapters to expreſs it as approaching, which made it unneceſſary to deſcribe it again more largely when it came to paſs.

b. οὐκ ἔτι Χρόνος] V. 6. Time no longer] The word χρόνος ſignifying time, ſignifies delay alſo: and accordingly thus the Verb χρονίζω, (rendred by Heſychius, διατρίβω, to ſtay) is uſed by the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 37. Ὁ ἐρχόμενος ὃ χρονιεῖ, he that comes will not delay, in the very notion that here, οὐκ ἔσται χρόνος ἔτι, there ſhall be no longer delay, God's judgments ſhall ſpeedily be executed; and this moſt agreeably to the expreſſion in Habakkuk, c. 2.3. It will ſurely come, οὐ μὴ χρονίσῃ, it will not tarry, or delay any longer. So Eccl. 7.16. of wrath, that is, the judgments of God, ὃ χρονιεῖ, it will make no long delay, and *c.*12.15. ὁ χρονιεῖ, he will not tarry. And ſo in Demoſthenes the word is uſed, χρόνους ἐμποιεῖν τοῖς πράγμασι, to cauſe delay in affairs.

οὐκ ἔτι Χρόνος

V. 11. Many peoples] What ἐπὶ λαοῖς here ſignifies may be thus collected. The word λαὸς people is frequently taken for the Jews, and then here in the Plural (ſee Acts 4.25. and note on Rev. 11. f) it will do the ſame; or elſe farther, it may ſignify this people in all their diſperſions, in Africk, and Egypt, and Greece, &c. where the judgments of God ſhould find them out, as many as continued obdurate, according to that of Chriſt's prediction, that whereſoever the carcaſs was, the Roman Eagles ſhould congregate and aſſemble unto them. Then for ἐπὶ, that muſt rather be render'd of, or concerning, (according to the looſer uſe of the Hebrew עַל, anſwerable to it) then before. And then προφητεύειν ἐπὶ λαοῖς is an eaſy and ordinary phraſe to denote the matter of the prophecy, and not the auditors of it; as when Ezek. 32.2. 'tis ſaid, take up a lamentation עַל פַּרְעֹה it is not before, but concerning Pharaoh. Then for the πολλοῖς many, that in the ordinary Tranſlation is joined with people; in the Greek 'tis the laſt word of the verſe, adjoined to βασιλεῦσι, Kings, and ſo muſt in reaſon be joined in the rendring. Then for the reſt that follow, ἔθνεσι καὶ γλώσσαις nations and languages, thoſe words moſt fitly ſignify the heathen world of diſtinct languages one from another, and all from the Jews; and agreeably the βασιλεῦσι πολλοῖς many kings, will ſignify their princes, or (conſidering them together in an Army) their Commanders or Rulers over them. And the joining of theſe with the λαοῖς, the people of the Jews, in the enſuing prophecy, will then ſignify their fighting and deſtroying the Jews; and ſo it will moſt exactly belong to the time of Adrian the Emperor of Rome and his Commanders, (all ſuch being called βασιλεῖς, Kings; ſee c. 6. Note h.) Marcius Turbo, and Rufus, &c. together with the Auxiliaries that came in to him from the Parthians, and many other Nations. All which together are the ſubject of his next prophecy, ch. 11. which is yet wanting to complete the deſtruction of the Jews, and therefore 'tis ſaid, Δεῖ σε πάλιν, Thou muſt prophecy again, or ſee another Viſion; and this will be the ſubject of it, the dealing of the Jews, and the farther deſtruction that befel them in Adrian's time. By what hath here been ſaid, will appear alſo what is meant by the people and kindred, or tribes, and tongues, and nations, c.11. 9. the two former, λαοὶ καὶ φυλαὶ and φυλαὶ, people and tribes, denoting the Jews, & the tongues and nations denoting the Gentiles, viz. the people of Jeruſalem, as now they were made up of Jews and Gentiles; neither of which ſhould ſhew any reverence to the Chriſtians, or expreſs any kindneſs to them, whilſt thoſe ſeditious people under Barchocbebah were in power, but on the contrary uſe them contumeliouſly, and triumph over them, *v.*10. And ſo I ſuppoſe φυλαὶ καὶ γλῶσσαι καὶ ἔθνη, tribes, and tongues, and nations, c. 14. 7. may denote the Jews and Gentiles, that is, in that place, the Saints or Chriſtians whereſoever inhabiting.

CHAP. XI.

Paraphraſe.

1 AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the Angel ſtood, ſaying, Riſe, and meaſure the Temple of God; and the a Altar, and them that worſhip therein.]

1. After the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, c.10. the moſt memorable paſſage concerning this matter of the Jews, (and ſo the fitteſt matter of a farther viſion) being that which fell on that people under the Emperor Adrian, the next viſion here ſeems to belong to that. And by way of preparation to the repreſenting of it, here is firſt ſet down Adrian's re-building of Jeruſalem, and ſetting up the heathen worſhip there. To this purpoſe, ſaith he, methought I had a meaſuring rod or pole, or perch, given me, (as in Ezekiel, c. 40.) and a command from the Angel to meet the Temple of God, that is, firſt, the Sanctuary or Holy, and in it the Holy of Holies, and then the Court where the Altar of burnt-offerings ſtood, and where the people worſhip'd and prayed to God, called the court of the Iſraelites. (This meaſuring is the incloſing or ſetting thus much of the Temple apart, in memory of the former conſecration, not to be prophaned, or meddled with, that is, built upon by the Emperor Adrian, who now deſigned to erect a new city there, calling it (by his own name Ælius) Ælia.

2. But the court which is without the Temple † leave out, and meaſure it not; for it is given unto the * Gentiles, and the holy city ſhall they tread under foot forty and two months.]

† caſt out, ἐκβαλὲ
* nations, ἔθνεσι

2. But I was appointed to leave or caſt out, that is, not thus to meaſure or incloſe, the court of the Gentiles, called the outer court, (ſee note on Eph. 2. a.) noting that the Roman Emperor ſhould take that in, and and build upon it and about it a new city, not only for Jews, but Gentiles to live in; and ſo that Jeruſalem, formerly called the faithful and holy city, ſhould now, being thus rebuilt, be called by another name, and prophaned with Idol-worſhip, a Temple being erected to Jupiter upon mount Sion, and ſo continue for the ſame proportion of time (that is, three years and an half) that it had in Daniel's prophecy been prophaned by Antiochus, Dan. 7.25.

3. And all this time there being two Chriſtian Biſhops of Jeruſalem, one of the Jewiſh, t'other of the Gentile or ſtranger Chriſtians there, and theſe being raiſed up by God like prophets to forewarn men of their ſins and danger, ſhall like prophets ſet themſelves againſt the ſins both of the Jews and Gentiles, labour to convert them all to Chriſtianity to bring them to the reformation of their wicked lives, to the purging out of all the abominable ſins (mentioned, c.9. 20, 21.) unreformed among them; and this the Angel told me they ſhould do all that ſpace of three years and an half (mentioned v. 2.) and do it (as prophets are wont, when they prophecy judgments on unreformed ſinners) in ſackcloth (ſee Mat. 3. d.) denoting the yet farther evil effects that would be conſequent to their ſtill holding out impenitent againſt the faith.

b. 3. And I will give power unto my [b] two witneſſes, and they ſhall prophecy a thou-ſand two hundred and threeſcore days clothed in ſackcloth.]

4. Theſe two Biſhops of the Chriſtian Churches there, together with the congregations belonging to them, were now to be look'd on as the advancers and reſtorers of piety, after that general depravation and infidelity in that place; and are therefore compared, the Biſhops to Zorobabel and Joſhua, Zach. 4.3. deſcribed there by the emblem of the two Olive-trees, and the two Churches to the two Candleſticks (ſee c. 1. 20.) ſtanding before the God of the land, ver. 14. that is, ſerving Chriſt continually at a time of ſuch univerſal corruption among all others.

4. Theſe are the two Olive-trees, and the two Candleſticks, ſtanding before the God of the † earth.] † land, γῆς

5. And to theſe two are appliable two paſſages of ſtory belonging to Elias, as firſt bringing down fire from heaven (noting what ſhall befal their enemies, v.13.)

5. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he muſt in this manner be killed.]

6. And ſecondly, having that power of prayer as to ſhut up heaven that it ſhould not rain for the ſame ſpace that Elias, that is, three years and an half, v.3. (ſee Jam. 5. 17.) and two paſſages more referring to Moſes; as firſt, the power to turn the water into blood thro' all Egypt, and ſecondly, to bring plagues upon them: noting by both theſe, that they were a kind of Moſes and Elias, deſigned by God, one to bring the Jews to obedience, as Moſes, the other to deſtroy Idolatry, as Elias; the firſt the work of the Biſhop of the Jewiſh congregations, the ſecond of the Biſhop of the Gentiles.

6. Theſe have power to ſhut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power * over waters to turn them to blood, and to ſmite the earth with all plagues as often as they will.] * on the waters ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων

7. And when they have ſpent a good time in diſcharging their office thus, in endeavouring to reduce both Jews and Gentiles, and bring them into the Church, an eminent inſtrument of the devils, Barchochebah, in Adrian's time, will gather a multitude of unbelieving Jews unto him, and as a wild beaſt ravine and devour, kill and plunder all that will not join with him againſt the Romans, and ſo (as hiſtories affirm of him) handle the Chriſtians cruelly and hoſtilely, becauſe they would not do ſo, and unleſs they would deny Chriſt.

c. 7. And when they ſhall have finiſhed their teſtimony, the beaſt, that aſcendeth out of the bottomleſs pit, ſhall [c] make war againſt them, and ſhall overcome them, and kill them.]

8. And their dead bodies ſhall lie in the ſtreets of the great city, which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Ægypt, where alſo our Lord was crucified.

8. And upon this pretence kill them, and caſt out their carcaſſes in the ſtreets without burial; and this ſtill in Jeruſalem (that no prophet might be ſlain any where elſe) which cannot better be compared then to Sodom, for abominable ſins of the Gnoſticks, to Egypt (ſee note c. on ch. 14.) for oppreſſing God's people, that is, the Chriſtians, nor expreſs'd by any character, then that which brought all their puniſhments upon them, their crucifying of Chriſt, and dealing in like manner with Chriſtians.

9. And thus ſhall it be, the Chriſtians ſhall be thus ſlain, and caſt out into the ſtreets, without any compaſſion or reverence, either from the Jews or heathens inhabiting at Jeruſalem (ſee note on ch. 10. c.) as long as that ſeditious company prevail there.

9. And they of the people, and † kindred, and tongues, and nations, ſhall ſee their dead bodies three days and an half, and ſhall not ſuffer their dead bodies to be put in * graves.] † tribes φυλῶν * tombs, monuments, μνήματα

10. And this ſhould be matter of rejoicing and congratulating to the Jews one with another, as upon the deſtruction of their greateſt enemies (as Elias was counted an enemy to Ahab, whom he would have reformed.)

10. And they that dwell † upon the earth, ſhall rejoyce over them, and make merry, and ſhall ſend gifts one to another; becauſe theſe two Prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.] † on the land, ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς

11. But after ſome time their cauſe ſhould come to be heard before God, their injuries to be avenged, the Chriſtians of theſe congregations ſhould begin to flouriſh again, as in a kind of reſurrection from the dead, by the power and mercy of God: and all that ſaw this, and the manner of doing it, (Chriſtians reſcued by the Idolatrous heathen Romans) could not but acknowledge it a great work of Gods, and worſhip God for it.

11. And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entred into them: and they ſtood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which ſaw them.]

12. And they were taken up as it were to heaven, out of this bloody ſeditious broil that lay ſo heavy upon them, that is, reſtored to a great and notable tranquility, to Halcyonian days of peace and Chriſtian profeſſion.

12. And they heard a great voice from heaven, ſaying unto them, Come up hither. And they aſcended up to heaven in a cloud, and their enemies beheld them.]

13. And as they were thus reſcued and believed, ſo the other inhabitants of that place, that joined in that ſedition, or comply'd with them againſt the Chriſtians, v. 10. were deſtroyed by the Romans, a great part of that new city, and the inhabitants thereof; and upon this the reſt turned Chriſtians, ſeeing the prophecies of the two witneſſes fulfilled upon thoſe that would not believe or obey them.

d. 13. And the ſame hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell; and in the earthquake were ſlain of men ſeven thouſand: and [d] the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.]

14. And ſo this calamity lightning on the Jews in Adrian's time was in a manner as bloody as that under Titus, and though it came ſome time after the former, yet was not long deferred. That under Titus was the ſecond woe, deſcribed from c. 9.12,15. to the end of chap. 10. and this under Adrian, the third ſet down from the beginning of this chapter, and cauſed by the ſedition of Barchochebah, v. 7.

e. 14. The [e] ſecond woe is paſt, and behold the third woe cometh quickly.]

15. And this ſummarily repeated by the ſounding of the ſeventh Angel, who was to conclude this whole Tragedy. For as he ſounded, Thunders were immediately heard, that is, pouring in of the Roman armies upon them, mentioned v. 13. and an immenſe multitude of Jews, almoſt ſix hundred thouſand of them, ſlain, ſaith Dio, others affirm as many more, from the beginning of this war. And as this was done on the ſeditious Jews, ſo by this means the Chriſtians, eſpecially of the Gentiles, came to flouriſh there more then ever, and that whole city became in a manner Gentile-Chriſtian, Marcus a Gentile being the one Biſhop, under which both Jew and Gentile-Chriſtian were united: and thus the Church of Jeruſalem entred upon her flouriſhing condition, and the faith of Chriſt got the upper hand, ſo as it never ſhould be deſtroyed utterly again.

f. 15. And the ſeventh Angel ſounded, and there were great voices in heaven, ſaying, [f] The kingdoms of this world are become * the kingdoms of our Lord and his Chriſt, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever.] * our Lords, and his Chriſts.

16. And

16. And the four and twenty elders, which ſat before God on their ſeats, fell upon their faces, and worſhipped God,]

16. And the four and twenty Biſhops of Judea, the whole Church of Judea

ch. 4. 2. acknowledged this great mercy of God, which tended wonderfully to the proſperity of under them.

17. Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God * Almighty, which † art, and waſt, and art to come; becauſe thou haſt * taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned:]

17. Saying, Bleſſed be God for this infinite mercy of his wherein he hath magnified his Chriſtian Church in his fidelity to the Chriſtians, and uſed the Gentile Romans as his inſtruments to ſet up Judea.

18. And the g nations † were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they ſhould be judged, and that thou ſhouldeſt give reward unto thy ſervants the prophets, and to the ſaints, and them that fear thy name, ſmall and great, and ſhouldeſt deſtroy them which * h deſtroy the earth.]

18. Now is fulfilled that prophecy of Pſal. 2. The Jewiſh nation have behaved themſelves moſt ſtubbornly againſt Chriſt, and cruelly againſt Chriſtians, and thy judgments are come upon them; and tho' the avenging of the blood of the Martyr-Chriſtians hath a while been deferred, till theſe other ſufferings under Barchochebah were added to them, c. 6. 11. yet now the time is fully come for all the vengeance to be poured out, the Jews and Gnoſticks to be deſtroyed, and all the orthodox pure conſtant Chriſtians to have days of tranquility, and peaceable profeſſion of the Goſpel, and liberty of aſſemblies.

19. And the Temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his † teſtament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail.]

19. And this is an effect of God's covenant of mercy made with believers, and which will never fail to be performed to all Chriſtians, that will in time of diſtreſſes and perſecutions wait and depend conſtantly, and that fall not off by any temptations from him. And there were lightnings, and voices and thunders, and great hail, which words in all probability belong to the next viſion (and chapter) and ſo are conpected by Andreas Ceſareenſis, and his exſcriber Arethas; and by them is noted, that there is a farther viſion behind, and that conſiſting of thundrings, and lightnings and earthquakes, that is, menaces of judgments from heaven againſt thoſe that had their hearts hardned and ſtubborn againſt Chriſt, of which the hail was an emblem, c. 8. 7. And who theſe were that were now next to come on the ſcene, will follow in the next Chapter.)

Annotations on Chap. XI.

a. Θυσιαστήριον

V. 1. Altar] The word θυσιαστήριον doth in ſome places ſignify the Altar of incenſe; ſee c. 6. e. In other places there is no queſtion but it ſignifies the Altar of burnt offering; but that again ſometimes not ſtrictly the Altar, but the court where the Altar is placed. So c. 14. 18. & 16. 7. it cannot be rendred Altar, becauſe there is mention of one going forth, and another ſpeaking out of it; it muſt therefore ſignify the court, or place of ſacrificing, wherein the Altar is: ſo ſaith the Gloſſary, θυσιαστήριον, ſacrarium, altarium; and in Philoxenus, ſacrarium, Ἡρῷον θυσιαστήριον· and in that ſenſe, ſaith Ignatius, ὁ ἐκτὸς ὢν θυσιαστηρίου, ἔτοι ὑστερεῖται ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, he that is out of the altar, that is, the Church, &c. And agreeably in this place, by that which follows, and thoſe that worſhip in it, (which belongs not to the Temple before, but is immediately annex'd to θυσιαστήριον) it cannot reaſonably denote the Altar, but the place wherein men were which worſhipped, and that here moſt probably is (not the Sanctuary, where the Altar of incenſe was, but) ἡ ἔσω αὐλὴ τοῦ ναοῦ, the inward court of the temple, (oppoſed to ἡ ἔξω αὐλὴ, outer court, that of the Gentiles here) that where the Congregation or people worſhipped. See Note on Mat. 23. i.

b. Μάρτυρες β.

V. 3. Two Witneſſes] Who the two Witneſſes are is the main difficulty of this chapter: And the matter here ſpoken of yielding ſome directions to pitch on the time of which this Viſion treats; as 1. the farther judgments falling on Jeruſalem after the deſtruction by Titus; and 2*ly*, thoſe after the rebuilding the city, and planting it with Gentiles as well as Jews, v. 1, 2. which muſt needs belong to the time of Adrian; it may be reaſonable to forſake all other conjectures, and pitch upon that which the learned Hugo Grotius hath reſolved on, of making the two Churches, which were at this time at Jeruſalem, one of the Jewiſh, the other of Gentile-Chriſtians, the two Witneſſes here ſpoken of; or more diſtinctly, I conceive, the two Biſhops of (and together with them) thoſe two Congregations. That there were two ſuch plantations in the ſame city, in many places, before the Jews and Gentiles grew into one, appears by divers evidences: In Antioch as one Church was planted, and governed by Peter, the Apoſtle of the circumciſion, ſo another by Paul, the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; and that is expreſs'd in the Epiſtle of the Council of Jeruſalem by οἱ κατ' Ἀντιόχειαν, &c. ἀδελφοὶ οἱ ἐξ ἐθνῶν, the brethren, that is, the Church, at Antioch, thoſe, or that, of the Gentiles, and in the one Euodius ſucceeded Biſhop, in the other Ignatius. So in Epheſus and Aſia, John was founder of the Churches of the Jews, and Paul of the Gentiles; and while John continued over the former, Timothy was by Paul made Biſhop at Epheſus over the latter. So at Rome, Peter was Biſhop of the Jewiſh congregation, and Clemens his Deacon, Paul of the Gentile part, and Linus his Deacon; and after them Clemens ſucceeds in one chair, and Linus in the other, and after him Cletus or Anacletus; and after him both joined together under Clemens. And thus it is to be ſuppoſed at Jeruſalem, eſpecially after the deſtruction by Titus, when there were many Gentiles there, which may occaſion the multitude of Biſhops that Euſebius obſerves to have been there in few years, till they joined both under Marcus a Gentile Biſhop in Adrian's time, (ſee v. 15.) And this was in ſome degree neceſſary, not only becauſe there was ſome diſtance kept betwixt the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians (which at Rome Paul endeavoured to make up, Rom. 14. &c.) but in reſpect of the ſeveral languages which they were of neceſſity to uſe in their aſſemblies, and farther in reſpect of the ſeveral cuſtoms for a good while continued among them. Now that all that is ſaid of theſe two witneſſes doth perfectly agree to theſe two Biſhops, and their congregations of Chriſtians, will appear in the Paraphraſe; and to that belong directly the deſcriptions here beſtowed on them. One, like Moſes over the Jews, labouring to bring all that people out of their Ægyptian blindneſs and bondage to ſin, their unchriſtian impenitence: and the other, like Elias preaching down idolatry, bringing the heathens to Chriſtianity. And then to theſe are fitly adjoined (in the chorus, as it were) the twenty four Elders, v. 16. that is, the Biſhops of all Judea, that belonged to the Biſhops of Jeruſalem, (as leſſer cities to to a Metropolis, c. 4. 4.) and had their part in the benefit of this deſtruction that fell on Barchochebah and the ſeditious Jews.

V. 7. Make war againſt them] That Barchochebah raiſed a ſedition againſt the Romans is known in ſtory, and that he call'd himſelf by that name, as ſon of a ſtar, but was after more truly called the ſon of a lie, that is, of an idol, which is a lie, and that idol a falſe God, that is, the Devil; or elſe more generally the ſon of a lie, that is, an impoſtor, coming from the father of lies, ſtir'd up and agitated by him, & ſo here aſcending out of the abyſs. The only thing here farther affirm'd of him is, that he wars againſt the two witneſſes, that is, againſt all the Chriſtians in Jeruſalem and Judea, uſing them cruelly and bloodily, if they would not join with him againſt the Romans, and if they would not deny Chriſt. Theſe two things are diſtinctly affirm'd, the firſt by Euſebius in his Chronicon: Chochebah, ſaith he, leader of a faction of the Jews, kill'd with all cruelty the Chriſtians that would not help him againſt the Romans. And ſo likwiſe Oroſius, l. 7. c. 13. Chriſtianos Judei, Cothebâ (that is, Cochebâ) duce, quod ſibi contra Romanos non aſſentarentur, excruciabant, The Jews under their leader Cocheba tormented the Chriſtians, becauſe they would not comply and take part with them againſt the Romans. The ſecond by Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. Βαρχοχέβας, ὁ τῆς Ἰουδαίων ἀποστάσεως ἀρχηγὸς, Χριστιανοὺς μόνους εἰς τιμωρίας δεινὰς, εἰ μὴ ἀρνοῖντο Ἰησοῦν τὸν Χριστὸν, καὶ βλασφημοῖεν ἐκέλευεν ἀπάγεσθαι, Barchochebas, the leader of the defection of the Jews, commanded the Chriſtians, and none elſe, to be led to cruel torments, if they would not deny Chriſt, and blaſpheme him.

V. 13. The remnant were affrighted] That the remnant here, that is, all the Jews in Jeruſalem that were not now deſtroyed, did convert and believe in Chriſt, appears by that which is ordinarily known in ſtory, that Adrian at this time by Edict baniſh'd all the Jews out of it, that is, all that remained ſuch, or were not converted to Chriſtianity, and ſet up the picture of a Swine at the gates, to keep any of them from thoughts of entring again, and even to baniſh their eyes from thence. (See Ariſto Pellæus in Euſebius, Τὸ πᾶν ἔθνος ἐξ ἐκείνου καὶ τοῦ νῦν τὰ περὶ τὴν Ἱεροσόλυμα γῆς πάμπαν ὁπόσαιονοῦν ἀφικνεῖσθαι νόμῳ διάγματι, καὶ Τάξεσιν Ἀδριανοῦ ὡς ἂν μηδ' ἐξ ἀπόπτου θεωρεῖν, The whole nation was from thenceforth forbidden to enter the region about Jeruſalem, and this by decree of Adrian, which commanded that none ſhould out of any eminent place ſo much as behold their native ſoil. And Tertullian Apolog. c. 21. Quibus nec advenarum jure terram patriam ſaltem veſtigio ſalutare conceditur, They were not permitted to ſalute, or viſit, their native country, ſo much as travellers, or gueſts: and ſo Adverſ. Jud. c. 13.) mean while the Chriſtians freely returning thither from their diſperſions, and inhabiting quietly there, Chriſtianis tantùm permiſſa civitas, ſaith Oroſius, the city was permitted to Chriſtians only, (ſee note on Luke 21. c.) that is, no Jews were there permitted that received not Chriſtianity.

V. 14. Second woe is paſt] Some miſtake there may poſſibly be in this place by conceiving theſe words, Ἡ οὐαὶ ἡ δευτέρα ἀπῆλθεν, the ſecond woe is paſt, to denote the deſcription of that ſecond woe to end in this place, and conſequently that, behold the third woe cometh quickly, ſhould ſignify that the coming of that third woe ſhould now next be ſet down. But this is a miſtake, that would be apt to diſturb and perplex the Viſion. For of the three woes denounced ch. 8. 13. 'tis plain that the firſt is ſet down from c. 9. 1, to v. 12. and there concludes, the firſt woe is paſt: Then after that, ſaith the Viſion, ἔρχονται ἔτι δύο οὐαί, there come two woes more. Theſe two are coupled together, and not ſet down ſo ſeverally as this firſt was from thoſe two, (thoſe latter two agreeing one with the other in this, that they were both executed by the Romans, whereas the firſt was by the Zelots among themſelves) and ſo deſcribed ſomewhat undiſcernibly, yet ſo that the ſecond may be found to end ch. 10. 10. upon which 'tis ſaid, that he muſt propheſy again, v. 11. that is, that there was not yet an end of that ſad matter, but that the third woe was ſtill behind, and that ſet down from the beginning of this 11th chap. to ver. 14. where that third (and ſo both theſe, δύο οὐαί, the ſecond and third named together, ch. 9. 12.) being at an end, in reference to both of them this verſe muſt be underſtood; that as the ſecond had been fulfill'd, c. 10. 10. ſo within a ſmall time after, no longer then from Titus to Adrian, the third was executed alſo, only by way of recapitulation the ſame thing is again ſet down, v. 15. very briefly, in the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet (as had been foretold it ſhould, ch. 10. 6, 7. upon which come out the great voices, that is, thunders (for voices and thunders, φωναὶ and βρονταὶ are all one; ſee Note on Acts 9. b.) ſignifying that deſtruction (ſee Note on ch. 10. a.) And this third woe being thus added to the two former, the effect and reſult of all the three woes is, the ſetting up of Chriſtianity in Judea. And that is ſignified by the acclamations, the kingdom is the Lord's, &c. Which ſpeech is ſaid to be deliver'd by the thunders, as being a moſt natural conſequent of that deſtruction. And then a new viſion of a new matter begins at the beginning of the twelfth chapter.

V. 15. The kingdom of this world are become the Kingd—] What is here meant by this acclamation, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, &c. may beſt be underſtood by theſe degrees; Firſt, that becoming the Lord's (all one with לאלהים Pſal. 47. 9. where 'tis ſaid the ſhields of the earth are the Lord's) ſignifies converſion to Chriſtianity, and that is evident by the addition of καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ, and his Chriſt's. Secondly, that the Kingdoms of the world ſignifies not here the whole world, and all the Kingdoms of that, but as (when it is ſaid the world hateth you, and I pray not for the world, and very often in the ſame ſtyle) the world ſignifies unbelievers, and βασιλείαι τῷ κόσμῳ the whole ſocieties and multitudes of them. And this being by the Context applied to Jeruſalem and Judea, the plain meaning of the whole phraſe muſt be, that the inhabitants of Jeruſalem and Judea were now generally converted to the faith of Chriſt, as in the ſtory it was known to be in Adrian's time, after the defeating of Barchochebah, the unbelieving Jews being finally baniſh'd thence, and the city inhabited by Chriſtians of that and other nations indifferently: ſee Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 5. As for that which follows in the acclamation, καὶ βασιλεύσει εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever, that is capable of a twofold interpretation: either more generally, that the Chriſtian faith and Church ſhall continue for ever (the gates of hades never prevailing againſt it) and ſupport it ſelf from being utterly deſtroyed, againſt all oppoſition; and this here fit to be pronounced of the Church in general, upon occaſion of this good ſucceſs of it in Jeruſalem and Judea, where it had been ſo long perſecuted, but now had gotten the victory: Or ſecondly, applying it particularly to this Church, the meaning may be, that Chriſt ſhould have faithful ſervants in Judea, and to continue to have ſo to all Eternity; which hath yet been made good through all changes and viciſſitudes, under the Pagan and Chriſtian Emperors firſt, and ſince under the Saracens and Turks.

V. 18. Nations] The word ἔθνος or ἔθνη doth not only belong to other nations in oppoſition to the Jews (the Ethnicks or heathens, as we call them, though when the word ἐθνικοὶ is uſed, that is the particular notion of it) but alſo to Paleſtine, either all together (as οἱ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν, in Orig. Cont. Celſum, l. 4. are the Jews in contradiſtinction to others) or to the ſeveral parts of it divided now into Tetrarchies, Judea one ἔθνος, and Galilee another, &c. and ſo ſaith Joſephus of Galilee, that it was the vialianteſt ἔθνος nation of Paleſtine, the powerfulleſt and beſt fortified, when he ſpeaks of Veſpaſian's overcoming it. And ſo in the Goſpels, ἔθνος ἐπὶ ἔθνος, nation againſt nation, Mat. 24. 7. Mark 13. 8. Luke 21. 10. & John 11. 48, 51, 52. & c. 18. 35. and in many other places; (and agreeably the Tetrarch of any one of theſe was called ἐθνάρχης, and in Latin Authors, Ethnarcha; of which ſee Baronius ad An. Ch. 2. Auguſt. 49. And not only in the Singular number, but alſo in the Plural, συνοχὴ ἐθνῶν, Luke 21. 25. the diſtreſs of nations, that is, of the ſeveral parts of Paleſtine, noted by ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς on the land, which belongs to that peculiarly (ſee note on ch. 7. a.) and to the inhabitants thereof, the Jews, and not to the heathens in the reſt of the world. For ſo that text refers, ſpeaking of their diſtreſs and great conſternation (ſee Note on Rev. 6. f.) συνοχὴ and ἀπορία, and their deanimation for fear and expectation of what would come upon the οἰκουμένη world, that is, that whole people, (ſee Luke 2. 1.) So Acts 4. 25. out of the Pſalmiſt, the ἔθνη καὶ λαοὶ, nations and people, that murmured againſt Chriſt, are ſure the people of the Jews, and are expreſs'd,

CHAP. XII.

Paraphraſe.

* a great ſign was ſeen σημεῖον μέγα ὤφθη

1 AND * there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman a clothed with the ſun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars:]

a. 1. Another viſion is here ſet down, & either the heav'n or the air made the ſcene whereon 'tis repreſented, thus; and methought I ſaw a woman, ſignifying the Church of Chriſt thereby, and that woman, that Church ſhining moſt illuſtriouſly with thoſe graces which Chriſt the Sun of righteouſneſs had beſtowed upon it, and thereby much outſhining the Jewiſh ſtate of imperfection before Chriſt came, which was now alſo deſtroyed, and this Church founded in the twelve Apoſtles, which, as teachers thereof, are beſt compared to ſtars, c.1.20. and thoſe as ſo many gems in the crown of the Church, that is, principal perſons in the conſtituting this kingdom of Chriſt.

† cried out in travail being in torture, κράζει ὠδίνουσα καὶ βασανίζομένη

2. And ſhe being with child, † cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.]

2. And this woman was with child, & ready to bring forth, that is, by the preaching of the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical men, was in travail to produce Chriſtians (ſee Gal.4.19.) that is, children to Chriſt, over all the world.

3. And there appeared another wonder in heaven, and behold, a great red Dragon, having ſeven heads and ten horns, and ſeven crowns upon his heads.]

3. And on the other ſide, methought there was a Dragon, that is, the devil, that great enemy of Chriſtianity, who had for a long time the City of Rome (ſo religiouſly devoted to the worſhip of Idols, that is, of Devils, 1 Cor.10.20.) under his command, and all the principalities under it (the firſt noted by the ſeven heads, that is, the ſeven hills, on which the city was built, the other by the ten horns, c.13. 1. and 17.9. and 12.) and that city (noted by the ſeven heads) was the Imperial city, and ſo had as many crowns on the heads.

4. And b his tail drew the third part of the ſtars of heaven, and did caſt them to the earth: and the dragon ſtood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as ſoon as it was born.]

b. 4. And the Devil, to oppoſe the proſpering of the word of Chriſt & preaching of the Goſpel, made uſe of ſubtilty, by the falſe doctrine of Simon and the Gnoſticks, to corrupt the doctors and people of the Church; and having ſucceeded proſperouſly in it in Samaria and other places, attempted the ſame alſo at Rome, that as ſoon as any turned Chriſtians, they ſhould infuſe their doctrines into them (ſee note on 2 Tim.3. a. and 2 Theſſ. 2.)

5. And ſhe brought forth a man-child, which was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.]

5. And there came into the Church many Chriſtians in the city of Rome, that imperial city, v.3. who proved very conſtant and faithful to Chriſt, and ſo a Church was eſtabliſh'd there; which ſhould convert many to the faith of Chriſt, by preaching the word (which is the rod of iron, that is, ſpiritual ſword, or ſcepter of Chriſt, the inſtrument of managing his ſpiritual kingdom, (ſee c. 2. note o.) unto them. And as ſoon as a Church was planted here, it was in the infancy endangered to be devoured by the Dragon, the devil aſſiſted by the Roman power, the perſecuting Emperor Nero, about the tenth year of his reign, had it not been wonderfully preſerved by God.

6. And the c woman fled into the wilderneſs, where ſhe hath a place prepared of God, that they ſhould feed her there a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days.]

c. 6. And ſoon after, the Chriſtians were by edict forbidden throughout the Empire: but God preſerved his Church in this perſecution, which laſted three years and an half.

7. And there was war in heaven; Michael and his Angels fought againſt the Dragon, and the Dragon fought and his Angels,]

7. And there was a great contention at Rome, between Simon Peter on one ſide, the planter of the Chriſtian faith, and Biſhop of the Jewiſh Chriſtians, and ſo maintainer of Michael's or Chriſt's cauſe there, and Simon Magus, that Apoſtate ſervant of the Devil, at his ſecond coming to Rome in Nero's time; the one contending for Chriſt, the other againſt him: ſee note on 2 Tim. 3. a.

8. And prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in heaven.]

8. And Peter and the cauſe of Chriſt prevailed againſt him: for tho' at his former coming to Rome, in Claudius's days, Simon was there worſhip'd for a God, and at his ſecond coming much favoured by Nero; yet upon his undertaking to fly in the air, by Peter's prayers he was caſt down and maimed in the fall, and thro' pain and ſhame forced to caſt himſelf headlong down from the top of an houſe: ſee 2 Tim 3. a.

*caſt, ἐβλήθη † caſt to the ground ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν γῆν

9. And the d great Dragon was * caſt out, that old ſerpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was † caſt out into the earth, and his Angels were caſt out with him.]

d. 9. And by this means the Devil (that doth ſo oppoſe the Chriſtian faith, & ſeduce men to heatheniſm and to corrupt living) was caſt out of his unlimited power in mens hearts, and many upon this victory of Peter over Simon Magus, turned Chriſtians.

10. And I heard a loud voice ſaying in heaven, Now is come ſalvation and ſtrength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Chriſt: for the accuſer of our brethren is caſt down, which e accuſed them before our God day and night.]

10. And this was matter of joy to all the Chriſtians, nay, to the angels of heaven, who therefore praiſed and magnified the power of the Chriſtian doctrine, which had caſt out that eminent piece of hypocriſy out of the Church, the doctrine of the Gnoſticks, which did really infuſe that into Chriſtians, for which the devil is wont to accuſe the ſervants of God falſely (and gave an eſſay of it in his charging of Job, c.1.11.) to wit, that in time of perſecution they will deny and forſwear Chriſt.

11. And they overcame him by the blood of the lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.]

11. And the faithful ſincere Chriſtians, Peter and Paul, and divers others, having the patience and conſtancy of Chriſt before their eyes, (who laid down his life for them) and his frequent doctrines of taking up the croſs, and following him, reſolved to do ſo as he had given them example and command: and this was a victory over Satan, and theſe inſtruments of his, the Gnoſticks, which would have ſeduced all the Chriſtians from their conſtancy.

12. Therefore rejoice ye heaven, and ye that dwell in them. Wo to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the ſea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, becauſe he knoweth that he hath * but a ſhort time.]

* a little ſeaſon, ὀλίγον καιρὸν

12. A thing much to be applauded & rejoic'd at by all good men and Angels. But upon this the Devil was hugely inraged, to ſee his ſubtilty (the tail of this ſerpent v. 4.) the falſe doctrines and infuſions of theſe hereticks thus miſcarry; and therefore in that rage of his, knowing that if he did not beſtir himſelf mightily, Chriſtianity prevailing in the purity and ſincerity of it, would utterly be his ruine, and that ſuddenly, he ſet a-foot the perſecution againſt the whole Chriſtian Church by Nero's edicts in a ſharp manner.

13. And

13. By this to revenge himself upon Christianity for the destruction of Simon, his beloved instrument.

13. And when the Dragan saw that he was cast † unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child.] † on the ground, εἰς τὴν γῆν

14. And so not only at Rome, v. 6. but in all other parts of the Roman Empire, Christianity was persecuted, and the Christians forced to fly, some one way and some another (as they had been Acts 8. 1.) by which means they were by the providence of God kept safe for some while, (see v. 6.)

14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great Eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place: where she is nourished for a * time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.] * season, καιρὸν

15. Mean-while Satan used all means to pursue the Christians whither they fled, raising up persecutions from Nero against them in the provinces, by which he hoped to have utterly drowned and destroyed the Church.

15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth waters as a † flood after the woman; that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.] † River, ποταμὸν

16. But these afflictions & calamities which the devil designed the Christians, were diverted by the seditions raised by the Jews against the Romans, by which means it came to pass, that all the malice which was by Satan designed against the Christians, fell actually upon the Jews, under Vespasian and Titus, and so at that time the persecution of the Christians was necessarily cooled, and fell upon the Jews their greatest enemies.

16. And † the * earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood, which the Dragon cast out of his mouth.] * land, γῆ

17. And this was a great vexation to Satan, to see Christianity thrive the better by this means, and therefore he set to his former design again, that of setting the Emperors upon persecuting the Christians, viz. the pure Orthodox of them that stood out constant in confession of Christ, and would not, for acquiring safety, join with the Jews or Gnosticks, and comply with them. And this persecution now designed by Satan, is that which fell out under Domitian, the subject of the next vision, c. 13.

17. And the Dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and † keep the testimony of Jesus Christ.] † have, ἔχοντων

Annotations on Chap. XII.

a. Ἥλιος Σελήνη

V. 1. Clothed with the sun. and —] What notion is here to be affix'd to the Sun and Moon, may thus most probably be resolved; the Sun being the spring and fulness of light, communicating to all, but needing not to receive light from any, may fitly represent the Christian religion, as that contains the doctrines of perfect purity, not only external, but of the heart, and is an addition of perfection to all the laws that had formerly been given to men. And then the Moon, being a fainter light, and proverbially noted for mutability, it may well signify the imperfect, and accordingly mutable œconomy of the Mosaical Law. That the Moon is under this woman's feet, may signify that the Church, noted by this woman clothed with the Sun, that is, the Christian Church, had now cast off that yoke of the Mosaical observances. Others have applied it to the use that Christian religion makes of the Law and Prophets, as a footstool to rest upon in some degree. But the phrase under the feet, rather implies that of bringing low, destroying, then making use of it; as when the enemies are put under the feet, or made the foot-stool, it notes them to be subdued. And so the Mosaical œconomy was at this time solemnly laid aside by the Christians, and the Nation and Temple destroyed in the former Visions.

V. 4. His tail] Supposing the great red Dragon, v. 3. to signify the Devil (see Note d.) the only question is, what is here meant by ἡ οὐρὰ αὐτοῦ, his tail. To this purpose it must be observed, that the serpents power of hurting lies principally in his head; and therefore as it is of them observed, that they do all they can to preserve their head, as that wherein they are most nearly concern'd, so the punishment that by God is threatned Satan in the shape of a serpent, Gen. 3. 15. is, that the seed of the woman shall bruise his head, that is, shall overpower and master him? And accordingly here the Roman Imperial power, by means of which the Devil is able to kill and persecute Christians, is express'd by the heads of the Dragon, v. 3. And then the tail being most distant from the head, and here mentioned distinctly from the seven heads, and that which here follows of drawing the stars, that is, corrupting the Christians, attributed distinctly to the tail, as that which succeeds, c. 13. 1. to the heads; it will follow, that the tail of the serpent shall most reasonably have a peculiar notion, and signify his policy and subtilty, which is the engine by which he works, before he proceeds to use his power, or when his power or force cannot prevail. And of this sort the Instruments ordinarily are Magicians and Sorcerers, and false Prophets, that by deceits seduce and corrupt men: and none more more eminently deserved this title then Simon and his followers, first, in respect of the prodigies that he made shew of; Secondly, by his doctrine of compliances, which offered all men ways of escaping persecutions, whether from the Jews or Gentiles, by determining it lawful to deny Christ, and offer sacrifices to Idols; Thirdly, by gratifying all their carnal desires, and giving them liberty for all uncleanness. From whence it is that Cyril of Jerusalem calls Simon by this title, so proper to this place, ὁ πρῶτος τῆς κακίας δράκων, the prime Dragon of wickedness, or wicked Dragon. And so this is most proper to this part of the Ecclesiastical story of those first times, that as soon as the wheat was any where sown, the enemy sowed his darnel also; wherever Christianity was planted, the Gnosticks' infusions followed, to spoil and destroy it: and so it was at Rome, and that peculiarly at this point of time here noted in this Vision, before the Imperial edicts for the persecuting of the Christians came out. For these, we know, followed the destruction of Simon, (see Note b.) and are the subject of the next chapter.

c. τοῦ ἤρξατο εἰς τὸν ἐμπρησμὸν

V. 6. Woman fled into the Wilderness] The time of the woman's flying into the wilderness, that is, of the banishing of the Christians from Rome, is known in story to have been in the tenth of Nero, at which time having fired the City, he imputed it unto the Christians. That he did it himself is affirmed clearly by Suetonius, in Ner. c. 38. quasi offensus deformitate veterum ædificiorum, & angustiis flexurisque vicorum, incendit urbem; & incendium ex turre Mæcenatiana prospectans, lætus flammæ, ut aiebat, pulchritudine, ἄλωσιν Illi in illo suo scenico habitu decantavit, Not liking the unbeautifulness of the ancient buildings, nor the narrowness and turnings of the streets, he set the city on fire, and there burnt all that was sacred and precious in the city, and looking on the fire from a towre, and delighted, as he said, with the beauty of the flame, sang in his scenical habit the taking of Troy. Thus again we find in Xiphilin out of Dio. But for this the Christians were accused by him, and cruelly punished, saith Tacitus Annal. l. 15. and that writer, being an hater of the Christians, is pleased to think them guilty, and falsly affirms, that some of them confess'd the Fact, whilst not only in the general reputation of all men that then lived, of other writers that wrote of those times, but by the confession of Tacitus himself, Nero was acknowledged the author of it, who meant to have the honour of building a new city, and calling it by his own name by this means. However the Persecution of the Christians began by this pretence, was by Nero's edicts the next year improved and advanced to so high a pitch, that Christianity was quite interdicted the Roman Empire. So saith Sulpicius Severus; Neque ullâ re Nero efficiebat quin ab eo jussum incendium putaretur; igitur vertit invidiam in Christianos

Christianos, atlæque in innoxios crudelissimæ quæstiones, quin & novæ mortes excogitatæ——Hoc initio in Christianos sæviri cæptum, post etiam datis legibus religio vetabatur, palamque edictis propositis Christianum esse non licebat, Nero could by no means perswade men but that the city was burnt by his command; whereupon he diverted the envy of it on the Christians, and appointed cruel torments for the examining them, and invented new kinds of death. On this beginning the persecution brake out against the Christians, and after it the religion was prohibited by laws, and publick edicts made that no man might be a Christian. And this is it which is here meant by the womans flying into the wilderness, and accordingly is by Tertullian called the first persecution; because tho' the Christians as such suffered before in Claudius's time, yet that was not by any Imperial edict, but only by tumults, when the heathen people were incited by the malicious Jews. For as we read, Acts 18. the Proconsul Gallio would be no Judge in such matters, but drave the Jews from the judgment-seat. And this was toward the latter end of Claudius, after Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome: In which banishment of the Jews some Christians might suffer occasionally, and S. John be banished into Patmos; but there was as yet no Edict against them as Christians, at the least none for the putting them to death, as the plea of S Paul before Felix, and Festus, his appeal to Cæsar, (which was at the beginning of Nero) make it plain. And accordingly we find, that when St. Paul came to Rome, Acts 28. he preached there μετὰ πάσης παῤῥησίας ἀκωλύτως, with all boldness, or publickness, and was not forbidden. And at the writing of his Epistle to the Romans, their faith, saith he, was famous in all the world, Rom. 1. and he had oft desired to come to them, Rom. 15. 22. and that for many years, v. 23. And all this in Claudius's time, before his going to Rome, which argues also that this woman was not yet fled, that is, banish'd, into the wilderness. And therefore of Nero it is Tertullians phrase, that he first dedicated persecution, & primum Neronem in hanc sectam ferociisse, Nero was the first Emperor that persecuted Christian Religion.

V. 9. Great Dragon] The Hebrews call Satan d. Ὁφις ἀρχαῖος הנחש הקדמוני, the old serpent: so again, c. 20. 2. And the casting him out at this time is the prospering of the Christian faith, consequent to this discomfiture of Simon Magus, and the manifestation of the power of Christ. So saith Arnobus, l. 2. Non distulerunt res patrias linquere, & veritati coalescere Christianæ: viderunt enim currum Simonis, &c. They delayed not to leave all their worldly possessions, and to cleave to Christianity (which was now under interdict:) For they saw Simons chariot and fiery horse dispelled by the breath of S. Peter's mouth, &c. And as by this means the Heathens were converted to the faith, by seeing the power of Peter, so were the Gnosticks discomfited, seeing their leader Simon destroyed.

V. 10. Accused them] The accusation that Satan e. ὁ Κατηγορῶν αὐτῶν brings against sincere Christians appears by his dealing with Job, c. 1. 9, 11. to be to this effect, that they are Hypocrites, and will only serve God as long as he protects and defends them. This it hereby appears that Satan looks on, as the charge of all others most for his turn to bring against men, and therefore that which he most desires to have truly said of them. Now the chief doctrine of the sect of the Gnosticks, the followers of this Simon, (who is called the first-born of Satan) was this, that in time of persecution it is lawful to deny and forswear Christ (which was the very thing that the Devil laid to Job's charge) and consequently all that were by him seduced into that doctrine, Satan might justly accuse before God day and night, as really guilty of that accusation. But when the doctrine of the Gnosticks and the professors of it were now cast out of the Church, then this is here truly said, that the accuser of the brethren, that is, of Christians, is cast out; that is, Satan can no longer with any justice accuse the Christian Church, or, if he do, he is found to be a false accuser.

V. 19. The earth helped the woman] The solemn notation of Judea by ἡ γῆ, the land, hath often been taken notice of, and is very pertinent to this place, the seditions that were raised there about this time of Nero's reign diverting the malice designed against the Christians: and the same continued all the time of Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian and Titus: and in all this space the Romans being wholly taken up about the Jews, the heathen Emperors did nothing against the Christians, till Domitian comes, who is the subject of the Vision in the next chapter.

CHAP. XIII. Paraphrase.

1 AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his head the name of blasphemy.]

1. And I was in the island Patmos, upon the sea-shore, when I saw the vision, that a.

I am now to set down, viz. concerning the execution of that design of Satan of bringing persecution on the Christians at Rome, c. 12. 17. And here the first thing I saw was a beast, representing the heathen worship, as it stood at Rome, rising out of the sea, as that is all one with the abyss or deep, that is, introduced among them by Satan (see note on ch. 11. c.) and thriving and prospering by the strength and power of the Roman Emperors; that heathen worship represented by this first beast, and the Roman Empire by the seven heads, either as seven Emperors, c. 17. 10. or else as referring to the seven hills of Rome, the seat of this Idol-worship, usurping to its self that blasphemous title of being a Goddess, and the ten horns ten kings, noting those that complied with Rome in this deifying of their Emperors, and in the rest of their Idol-worship, viz. the many Kings that were by the Roman Emperor set over other places, who therefore are said to have ten Crowns.

2. And the beast which I saw was like unto a Leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.]

2. And this Idolatrous heathen worship, thus assisted by the power of the Empire, began to be very cruel, and cannot sufficiently be expres'd by one cruel beast, but having variety of all kinds of gods in it, from which 'tis represented by a spekled leopard, it exercises all the cruelty both of Bear and Lion, as was manifest by their persecutions of Christians. And to the sustaining of this beast (the Idolatrous heathen worship) the Devil (that laboured to destroy Christianity, c. 12. 3.) contributed all his power and skill, did all that he could to hold it up, by prodigies, and by all other means.

† the whole land, ὅλη ἡ γῆ 3. And I saw b one of his heads as it were wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed, and † all the world wandered after the beast.]

3. And tho' one prime Temple on one of the seven hills of Rome, the most stately of all the rest, and so called the Capitol, from a Latin word signifying head, were burnt down by lightning, and esteemed to be smitten by God from heaven, and so Idolatry conceived to have received a fatal blow; yet that was soon rebuilt by Domitian the Emperor of Rome, and that gave a great confirmation to idolatry among all that lived in the Roman dominions, and took notice of it. See note k. b.

4. And they worshipped the Dragon which gave power unto the beast, and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast; who is able to make war with him:]

4. And they worshipped the Devil, who had thus upheld the heathen religion, when the Jewish was destroyed, resolving from hence, that the God of Israel was not able to contend with their Devils, nor his religion able to maintain it self against their Idol-worship.

5. And

c. 5. And hereupon the heathen Idol-worſhip and worſhippers began to deſpiſe all others, and to ſcoff at the God of Iſrael (and the heathen Emperors to call themſelves Gods, for ſo Domitian did) upon the deſtruction of the Temple at Jeruſalem, concluding thence that that God of Iſrael was not the true God. And ſoon after this, Domitian began a perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, as thoſe which oppoſed the heathen worſhips, and continued it about three years and a half, until his death.

d. 5. And there was given unto him [c] a mouth ſpeaking great things and blaſphemies, and power was given unto him to [d] continue forty and two months.]

6. And this ſame Domitian was very bitter againſt God, the Church, and all Chriſtians, in all this being a factor for the beaſt or Idol-worſhip.

6. And he opened his mouth in blaſphemy againſt God, to blaſpheme his name and his tabernacle, and them that dwelt in heaven.]

7. And was permitted by God to perſecute the Chriſtians, and to ſuppreſs them

7. And it was given unto him to make war with the Saints and to overcome them: and power was given him over * all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.]

whereſoever they inhabited, whether of Jewiſh or Gentile extraction (ſee note on ch. 10. c.)

e. 8. And all the Chriſtian profeſſors within the compaſs of the Roman dominions were put to ſore trials, and of them very many were wrought upon by this means, viz. the carnal temporizing Gnoſticks, which had not a mind to be martyrs and confeſſors for Chriſt, but rather choſe to comply with Idolatry, then to ſuffer for Chriſt.

8. And all that dwell upon the earth ſhall worſhip him, whoſe [e] names † are not written in the book of life of the lamb, ſlain from the foundation of the world.]

† were not written from the foundation of the world in the book of life of the lamb that was slain οὐ γέγραπται ἐν τῷ βίβλῳ τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ ἀρνίου ἐσφαγμένου ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου

9. If any man have an ear, let him hear.

f. 9,10. And this perſecution of his againſt the Chriſtians was ſo ſharp and unreſiſtible, that (which is the thing that all Chriſtians are concerned to take notice of) there was nothing left to the perſecuted but the exerciſe of their patience, the one in bearing without reſiſtance what befals them, the other in truſting God with their condition, and never revolting from him, or attempting to relieve themſelves by ſecular arms; for as thoſe are unlawful for ſubjects to make uſe of againſt the lawful power under which they are, though never ſo ſharp or injurious to them, ſo would it prove, if 'twere uſed, but a means to bring more miſery upon them.

10. * he that † leadeth into captivity, ſhall go into captivity: he that killeth with the ſword, muſt be killed with the ſword. Here is the patience and faith of the Saints.]

* if any man gather together a captivity, he goeth Εἴτις αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγει, ὑπάγει † the lamb, & he ſpake like the dragon

g. 11. The next part of this viſion was the repreſenting a ſecond beaſt, by which is meant the magick, and auguries, and oracles of the heathen Prieſts, which appeared to me to aſcend out of the earth, or from under ground, as the Oracles were wont to be delivered: and this beaſt had two horns, theſe men had two powers, by which they made themſelves fit to be conſidered, doing of miracles, and divination, wherein they had ſome reſemblance of Chriſt the Lamb, but made uſe of theſe to all diabolical ends of cruelty, and delivered their Oracles, as the devil was wont to do, in dubious forms.

h. 11. And I beheld [g] another beaſt coming up out of the earth, and he had [h] two horns like † a lamb, and he ſpake as a dragon.]

12. And all this was made uſe of to advance Idol-worſhip, which before haſt loſt ſome reputation in the burning of the Capitol, ver. 3.

12. And he exerciſeth all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, and cauſeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe deadly wound was healed.]

i. 13. And by theſe great wonders were pretended to be done, even calling and bringing down fire from heaven, which is affirmed of Apollonius.

13. And he doth great wonders, ſo that he [i] maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the ſight of men;]

14. And by theſe and the like prodigies, ſhewed in ſeveral parts of the Empire, they endeavoured to ſet up the ſame Idol worſhip among them, which was at Rome.

k. 14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by the means of thoſe miracles which he had power to do in the ſight of the beaſt, ſaying to them that dwell on the earth, that they ſhould [k] make an image to the beaſt, which had the wound by a ſword, and did live.]

l. 15. And theſe heathen Augurs and Prieſts ſet up oracles in new places, and by reſponſes from them engaged the Emperor, and his officers in the Provinces, to perſecute and make bloody Edicts againſt the Chriſtians.

15. And he had power to give [l] * life unto the image of the beaſt, that the image of the beaſt ſhould both ſpeak, and cauſe that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt ſhould be killed.]

16. And by that means Edicts came out for all men in the whole Empire to enter into, and join in their heathen worſhips.

16. And he † cauſeth all, both ſmall and great, rich and poor, free and bond, * to receive [m] a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads;]

And therewith baniſhment, or interdicting of all privileges and advantages of life, to all that do not thus join publickly with them, and to that end enter into their religion by ſome of thoſe ways uſual among them, by having the mark of the god, or the name, or ſome numeral letters that ſignify his name, branded on them.

17. And that [m] no man might buy or ſell, ſave he that had the mark, or the [n] name of the beaſt, or the number of his name.]

o. 18. And for the laſt of theſe, it was repreſented in the viſion to be three letters, which ſignify ſix hundred ſixty ſix: the foretelling of which ought to be look'd on as an act of infinite wiſdom in Chriſt, that ſent this prophecy, and conſequently to be attended to as ſuch: or elſe the finding this out will be matter of wiſdom, a work of ſagacity in any, and yet poſſible, when the time comes, to be obſerved; for the way of numbring here mentioned is that which is of ordinary uſe among men.

18. Here is [o] wiſdom. Let him that hath underſtanding count the number of the beaſt: for it is the number of a man; and his number is ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix.]

Annotations on Chap. XIII.

a. Ονομα βλασφημίας

V. 1. The name of blaſphemy] Ὄνομα βλασφημίας name of blaſpemy literally ſignifies ſuch a title as cannot be aſſumed or owned without blaſphemy. Now blaſphemy is committed two ways, either by ſpeaking contumeliouſly of the true God, or giving divine honour to any elſe; which is alſo the taking that honour which is due to him alone, and beſtowing it upon others, and ſo as contrary to his being acknowledged the one God, as the uſing him reproachfully is to his being God. And therefore it is that Paul and Barnabas having divine honours attributed to them at Lyſtra, they rent their cloaths, Acts 14. 14. in the ſame manner as was uſual among them when any man was heard to blaſpheme, ſignifying thereby, that ſacrificing to any creature is direct blaſphemy againſt the Creator. Now what this title of blaſphemy was, which is here referred to, is ſpecified by St. Jerom, Qu. 11. ad Algaſ. Æterna cùm dicitur quæ temporalis eſt, nomen eſt blaſphemiæ, The city Rome was called the eternal city (ſo Auſonius Gallus,

Urbis ab æternæ deductam rege Quirino
Annorum ſeriem —— —— & Hæc erit æternæ ſeries ab origine mundi.)

which to be attributed to any thing which had a beginning and ſhall certainly have an end, is a name of blaſphemy. So in the ſame words * Proſper, Æterna cum dicitur quæ temporalis eſt, utique nomen eſt blaſphemiæ, cùm mortales, licet reges, in ea dicantur Divi, eiſque ſupplices dicunt, Numini veſtro, alturibus veſtris, perennitati veſtræ, &c. For that which is temporal to be called eternal, is the name of blaſphemy, when their kings though mortal are called gods, and their their ſuppliants addreſs to them in this ſtyle, To your Deity, your altars, your eternity, &c. See ch. 17. Note a. But beſide this, (and what Athenæus ſays of it, l. 1. where he enſtyles it, ἐφουράνιος Ῥώμη, Rome the Cæleſtial, or heavenly city) it appears by many ancient Roman coins (ſet down by Goltzius in Theſauro) that Rome was called a Goddeſs, there being many ſuch inſcriptions, Ῥώμη Θεὰ, Rome a Goddeſs. Accordingly the people of Smyrna built a Temple to it, ſaith Tacitus hiſt. l. 3. and other Provinces uſed the like flattery, erected Temples, appointed Prieſts to the Goddeſs Rome; and at laſt Adrian raiſed a ſtately Temple, and called it Templum Romæ & Auguſtorum, the Temple of Rome and of the Emperors (that is, dedicated to them, as to gods) ſaith Dio in Adriano. And accordingly this idolatry or blaſphemy is taxed by Prudentius,

—colitur nam ſanguine & ipſa
More Dea, Nomenque loci ceu numen adorant,

Rome is worſhip'd by ſacrifice, after the manner of a Goddeſs, and they adore the name of the city as a deity. And to this it is agreeable that many other Copies read ὀνόματα βλασφημίας, names of blaſphemy in the Plural, more ſuch blaſphemous titles beſide that of Urbs Æterna, the Eternal City, that one of Θεὰ, Goddeſs, and the erecting Temples to it, containing all imaginable blaſphemies in it.

V. 3. One of his heads.] What is here meant by μία τῶν κεφαλῶν, one of the heads, will be judged, firſt, by the notion of head; ſecondly, of μία, one. The head is the uppermoſt part of a man, and ſo proverbially ſignifies any thing that is moſt eminent or conſpicuous; and ſo here v. 1. the ſeven heads are moſt probably the ſeven hills on which Rome was built. Then for μία, that (for want of degrees of compariſon in the Hebrew language) is by an Hebraiſm oft taken for πρώτη the firſt, as Mat. 28. 1. μία ϛαββάτων, (not one, but) the firſt of the week. Both theſe concur to apply this phraſe, μία τῶν κεφαλῶν, to the Capitol at Rome, to which it belongs ſo properly and characteriſtically. For firſt, the word Capitol certainly comes from Caput, an head; and Livy renders the reaſon for it, that a man's head being found in that place where that was after built, (Caput Toli, the head of Tolus, ſaith Arnobius) the Oracle anſwered, Eo loco caput ſummámque imperii fore, that the head and top of the Empire ſhould be there. Secondly, In this place was the Temple of Jupiter, called therefore Jupiter Capitolinus; and he being the firſt or chief of the gods, the place where his Temple ſtood may well be the principal of the heads of this city. Now that this head is here ſaid ἐσφαγμένη εἰς θάνατον, ſlaughter'd or ſmitten to death, this clearly belongs to the burning of the Capitol; which fell out twice about theſe times. Firſt, It was ſet a-fire by thoſe that accompanied Sabinus and Domitian thither, and who were there beſieged by Vitellius's ſoldiers, a little before the death of Vitellius; whoſe ſucceſſor Veſpaſian, being returned out of Judæa, and having committed the war againſt the Jews to his ſon Titus, in the very next year (at which time the Temple at Jeruſalem was burnt) re-built the Capitol moſt ſumptuouſly, and reſtored Jupiter's Temple in it: Which as it was a kind of recovery of Rome from a mortal diſeaſe (expreſs'd by a coin of Veſpaſian's, inſcribed Roma reſurges, Rome thou ſhalt riſe again) ſo it was looked on as a great expreſſion of the wrath of God againſt the Jews, that at that time not only their Temple was burnt, but that other of Jupiter at Rome permitted to be re-built, and at Jeruſalem heathen ſacrifices offer'd in the Temple of God by the Roman ſoldiers, and all God's Prieſts fetch'd out of their caves or hiding-places, and killed by Titus's command. Of this re-edifying the Capitol ſee Tacitus hiſt. l. 4. And to this the words here would commodiouſly enough be appliable. But beſides this, there was a ſecond wounding of this firſt head, another burning of the Capitol in Titus's reign, which was by lightning, and ſo eſteemed to be ſent from heaven. And this is more proper to this point of time, to which this viſion belongs, and being done as from heaven might from thence be more fitly objected to idolatry, as a deadly wound to that worſhip of Jupiter. And this was ſo ſumptuouſly repaired by Domitian (whoſe time is the ſubject of the Viſion in this chapter) that Martial makes Jupiter indebted to him for it,

Pro Capitolinis quid enim tibi ſolvere templis, Quid pro Tarpeiæ frondis honore poteſt?

What can Jupiter pay thee for this Temple in the Capitol? And on this 'tis ſaid that the whole earth wandred after the beaſt. Where by ὅλη ἡ γῆ, the whole earth or land, the Roman Territories are moſt probably meant (ſee Note k.) which are to Rome as all Palæſtine (ſo often call'd by that ſtyle, the land) to Jeruſalem; and the ἐθαυμάσθη ὀπίσω, wondring behind, or after, the beaſt, ſignifies their great veneration (wrought in them by this means) to the Idol-worſhip, which is farther expreſs'd by their worſhipping the Dragon, that is, the Devil, v. 2. called the old ſerpent, c. 12. 9. and the Devil and Satan, a Dragon being but a flying ſerpent, by which the Devil hath always been repreſented. Who being here look'd on as the maintainer of the heathen worſhip, he is adored and applauded greatly; and that farther expreſs'd by their ſaying, Who is like unto the beaſt? who can fight with him? that is, No man or God is able to oppoſe this Idol-worſhip profeſs'd in the Capitol, or reſiſt the power by which it is upheld.

V. 5. A mouth ſpeaking great things and blaſphemies.] One ſpecial teſtimony of the Heathens blaſphemy againſt God upon occaſion of the Romans victories over the Jews, is that of Cicero pro Flacco, ſpeaking of the Jews, Illa gens, quàm chara diis immortalibus eſſet, docuit, quòd eſt victa, quòd elocata, quòd ſervit, That nation hath taught us how dear they are to the immortal gods by their being conquered, and ſubjected by the Romans to a King of their ſending thither. This hath been thought fit by a learned man to be brought to the illuſtrating of this place, though indeed it belong to it only by way of accommodation, as a proof how apt the Romans proſperity and conqueſts over Judæa were to make them blaſpheme God; not that this ſpeech can belong to the point of time now ſpoken of, being delivered long before by Cicero. Dionyſius Alexandrinus in Euſebius l. 7. c. 10. applies it to Valerian 255. years after Chriſt, who (by the inſtigation of the chief of the Magicians in Ægypt, commanding him τὺς καθαροὺς ἀνδρας καὶ ὁσίους κτίννυσθαι καὶ διώκεσθαι, to kill and perſecute the pure and holy men, ὡς κωλύσας, &c. as thoſe that hindred their inchantments) became a great enemy of the Church. The like is again related of Diocleſian, that upon a reſponſe of Apollo from Delphi, that the juſt upon earth hindred him from ſpeaking truth, he fell on perſecuting the Chriſtians, ſee Euſebius De vita Conſt. l. 2. c. 49, 50. But that which is more pertinent to the time whereof, I conceive, the Viſion ſpeaks, is Domitian's ſtyling himſelf Dominus & Deus noſter, and forbidding ne ſcripto quidem ac ſermone cujuſdam appellaretur aliter, that any, whether in words or writing, ſhould call him otherwiſe, and appointing his ſtatues of gold and ſilver to be ſet up in the Capitol, and his profeſſing his contempt of thunder and lightning. See Suetonius in his life, c. 13.

Ib. Continue forty and two months.] That which is read in ſome Copies, ποιῆσαι πόλεμον μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα δύο, to wage war forty two months, that is, three years and an half, is in other the beſt and ancienteſt Copies (without πόλεμον.) ποιεῖν μῆνας, &c. and then that is to ſpend or ſtay ſo many months. Thus the King's MS. hath it: and ſo in Euſebius Eccl. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 10. Dionyſius Alexandrinus citing this place reads it ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἐξουσία καὶ μῆνες (or, as another reading of Euſebius hath it, μῆνας) τεσσαράκοντα δύο, power was given him forty two months. And then to ſtay ſo many months is to live ſo long; which was punctually true of Domitian, who began his perſecution in the thirteenth, and dyed in the ſixteenth year of his reign. And ſo this is directly anſwerable to the ſpace wherein Antiochus had vexed the Jews, Dan. 7. 24. (ſee Euſebius Eccl. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 13.) and ſo is fit to be expreſs'd in the ſame form of words, as we ſee it is.

e. Βίβλοι ζωῆς τῦ ἀρνίυ ἐσφαγμέν. V. 8. Names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb ſlain.] That the words here ſhould not be read thus, the Lamb ſlain from the beginning of the world (though it be perfectly true that Chriſt was in the deſignation and decree of God ſo ſlain from the beginning) but thus, Ὀνόματα οὐ γέγραπται ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμυ, whoſe names were not written from the foundation of the world, (that is, were never written) in the book of life of the Lamb that was ſlain, may ſufficiently appear by comparing this expreſſion here with c. 17. 8. where the words are, whoſe names are not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world. Now ſome difference there is betwixt the book of life of the Lamb ſlain here, and the book of life in that place. There the book of life ſignifies the regiſter of all the good Chriſtians on earth, ſuch as at that time, when their names are ſaid to be written in it, are true believers; but the book of life of the Lamb that was ſlain ſignifies peculiarly the regiſter or catalogue of confeſſors, ſuch as already have, or are now about to venture their lives for the confeſſion of Chriſt, to take up his croſs and follow him, and ſo are conformable to this image of Chriſt, this of the Paſchal lamb (by which he was anciently repreſented) the ſacrificed, crucified Saviour. And ſo theſe men of the land, that is, the Jews here that worſhip the beaſt, the Gnoſticks, that to avoid perſecution go to their Idol feaſts or ſacrifices, are juſtly thus deſcribed, they whoſe names, from the foundation of the world, have not been written in this book of life of the ſlain lamb, or in the ſlain lamb's book of life.

f. Αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγειν. V. 10. Leadeth into captivity.] Αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγειν is to gather together a captivity, that is, a number of Captives, as he that undertakes to bring them back out of their Captivity, to be their Captain, and lead them againſt their Conqueror that hath taken them, as ζωάγειν εἰς πόλεμον, to gather to war, c. 16. 14, 16. and 20. 8. and as the word gathering is particularly applied to Captives, and ſo uſed by the Pſalmiſt, Gather us, O Lord, from among the people, &c. Pſal. 106. 47. having in the former verſe mentioned τὸς αἰχμαλωτεύσαντας, thoſe that had carried them captive, which concludes the ἡμᾶς us there, to be the αἰχμαλωσίαν, Captivity here (in like manner as περιτομὴ circumciſion is the Jews which were circumciſed, and many the like) juſt as the קבצנו or ἐπισωάγαγε, gather together, is all one with the συνάγειν, gathering. This is after farther expreſs'd by killing with the ſword, that is, making violent reſiſtance and oppoſition againſt the perſecuting Emperors; which for a Chriſtian to do is quite contrary to the faith and patience of the Saints, which conſiſts in ſuffering, not in reſiſting, in having their names written in the ſlain lamb's book of life (ſee Note d.) not in the military liſt of thoſe that will fight againſt their lawful ſuperiors rather than ſuffer under them. Now as God hath in the fifth Commandment of the Decalogue commanded obedience, and (in the Pſalmiſt, and in the Sermon on the mount) meekneſs, with the promiſe of temporal bleſſings; ſo here doth he deter from reſiſtance or rebellion, even againſt perſecuting Emperors, by denouncing of temporal judgments of an higher nature than thoſe which by that means any man deſireth or attempteth to avoid. He that goeth about to deliver thoſe conquer'd Captives out of the Emperor's hands, out of his oppreſſions or perſecutions, ſhall do them no good, but ſhall himſelf be juſtly puniſh'd by him, by the righteous judgment of God, who loves not thus to be aſſiſted (any more than Chriſt by S. Peter's ſword) againſt his enemies, but denounces (as there in the Goſpel, ſo here) periſhing by the ſword againſt him that thus uſeth the ſword againſt a lawful ſuperior, though acting wickedly againſt Chriſt or Chriſtianity. And ſo the only Chriſtian weapons againſt perſecuting Princes are demonſtrated to be Patience and Faith, enduring meekly what comes from them, and referring our cauſe to God only. And by theſe means (ſo neceſſary for every Chriſtian to obſerve, v. 9.) hath Chriſtianity ever flouriſhed, and by none other.

V. 11. Another beaſt.] what this ἄλλο θηρίον other, or ſecond, beaſt ſignified in this Viſion, is determinable by the conſequents (v. 13, 14.) thus far, that it muſt denote ſome one or more Sorcerers or Magicians, to whom it is peculiar to do the great wonders, to make fire come down from heaven, v. 13. to deceive by means of thoſe miracles which he hath power to do before the beaſt. Of this therefore ſo ſignally ſet down there can be no place of queſtion, nor conſequently that theſe ſorcerers were Heathens, being by the Devil made uſe of to ſupport and advance Heatheniſm and Idolatry. This appears 1. by his ſpeaking like the Dragon, that is, the Devil (ſee Note b.) 2*dly*, by his exerciſing all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, that is, aſſiſting of the heathen worſhip, v. 1. whoſe deadly wound was cured, that is, which was newly reſtored to a flouriſhing condition again by Domitian's re-edifying of the Capitol, (ſee Note b.) 3*dly*, by his commanding to make an Image to the beaſt, v. 4. (which muſt be again the advancing of heathen worſhip) and ſo the giving breath to the image, as ſhall anon appear. It is therefore moſt reaſonable to interpret this ſecond beaſt of Apollonius Tyaneus, that did ſuch feats at this point of time, and was the perſon whoſe life is ſo ſolemnly written by Philoſtratus, and his miracles by Hierocles compared with and preferred before Chriſt's, that he cannot be look'd on as a perſon too mean to be thus repreſented in this Viſion. But this not ſo as to confine it to his perſon, (for Chriſt himſelf is oft not the perſon of Chriſt, but he and his followers, the Chriſtians together) but to comprehend alſo the Magicians, Sorcerers, Augurs, heathen Prieſts, ἱερασκόποι, that divined by the entrails of beaſts, flying of birds, the whole ſort and profeſſion of theſe. For that it belongs not to Simon Magus, and his followers, Menander and Baſilides, &c. (though they were all Sorcerers) appears, 1. becauſe Simon was worſhip'd in time of Claudius; and though in Nero's reign he came a ſecond time to Rome, yet he was then worſted and deſtroyed by the Apoſtles S. Peter and S. Paul, and the Chriſtian religion advanced by that means, not Heatheniſm, as here it is; and 2*ly*, the contexture of theſe Viſions, and other characters in the former part of this chapter, determine this of the ſecond beaſt to Domitian's and not to Nero's time: and for Menander and Baſilides, &c. they kept and taught in Palæſtine, Ægypt, and Syria, whereas this ſecond beaſt muſt have a larger influence, and that particularly on heathen Rome, and the heathen worſhip there, denoted by the firſt beaſt, whoſe deadly wound had been cured. And for the confirming of this interpretation, it is to be obſerved (what is moſt evident) that this ſecond beaſt, and the falſe prophet, c. 19, 20. had the ſame deſign. For as here the ſecond beaſt doth his miracles before the firſt, v. 12. and commands to make an image to the beaſt, v. 14. and cauſeth them to take the mark of the beaſt upon them, v. 16. ſo there the falſe prophet had done his ſigns before the beaſt, by which he had deceived thoſe that received the mark of the beaſt, and worſhip'd his image. And that there the falſe prophet ſignifies the heathen diviners, that foretold out of the Oracles of the Sibyls, &c. will appear c. 16. 13, 14. (Note g.) This being thus evinced, that this whole ſort of deceivers (who by their arts were ſerviceable to the confirmation of heathen Idolatry) are denoted and repreſented by the ſecond beaſt, the ſeveral Phraſes in this Viſion and parts of the repreſentation will be very intelligible; as will appear in the following Notes.

g. Ἄλλο θηρίον.

Ib. Two horns.] Κέρατα, horns in the Scripture moſt commonly ſignifie power or ſtrength, becauſe the horns of beaſts being their weapons, their power of defending themſelves, or hurting others, doth moſt properly conſiſt in them: ſee Note on Luke 1. n. And though it be here the horns of a lamb, which is no ſtrong or formidable beaſt, yet ſtill the horns of the lamb, or ſheep, are the only ſtrength which that creature hath, and horns cannot properly ſignifie any thing elſe but ſtrength. As for the whole phraſe here, Κέρατα δύο ὅμοια ἀρνίῳ, two horns like unto (a or) the lamb, it muſt be interpreted by an analogy with

h. Κέρατα.

with what we read ch. 5. 6. There Chriſt having been ſlain, and riſen again, and inſtall'd in his regal power, is repreſented by a lamb having ſeven horns, which are the denotation of his ſeveral branches of power, uſeful to him for the ſubduing his enemies: And ſo here of this ſecond beaſt it is ſaid, that it hath two horns like the lamb, that is, this lamb before deſcribed, ch. 5. in like manner as the beaſts ſpeaking ὡς Δράκων, as the Dragon, refers to the Dragon, v. 2, 4. And though the demonſtrative article ὁ be not prefix'd, yet that is ſo ordinarily left out in all Writers, when it muſt be retain'd in the ſenſe, that no objection can be drawn from thence. This then being thus far clear, it remains only to enquire what acts of power are here meant by the two horns. And 1. it muſt be reſolved that they are two ſuch as are like two of Chriſt's; for that is concluded from the ὅμοια ἀρνίῳ, like the lamb. Of which number as the power of miracles and of prophecy are certainly two, ſo there is great reaſon here from the Context to reſolve theſe to be the two that are here meant. For it being already cleared, that κέρατα, horns ſignifie powers, two powers are here named diſtinctly in the following verſes; firſt, the power of working ſigns, ver. 14. ſecondly, of giving breath to the image of the beaſt, ver. 15. For that is the denotation of ἐδόθη αὐτῷ in thoſe two (and very ordinary in other) places, It was given to him, that is, Power was given to him, or he had power (ſee Luke 1. Note p.) Now the σημεῖα, ſigns, doth acknowledgly denote miracles; and ſo it is ſpecified ver. 13. He doth great ſigns, ſo that he makes fire come down from heaven, &c. and ſo that is the firſt horn of this ſecond beaſt, the Magicians and Sorceres power of working ſome prodigies, like unto thoſe that Chriſt the lamb (himſelf, and in his Apoſtles afterwards) had wrought, reſembling them, but not truly ſuch, falſe, deceitful miracles. And for the power of giving breath to the image of the beaſt, that is expreſs'd in the next words to be the enabling the image of the beaſt to ſpeak, which clearly denotes the receiving reſponſes from the Devil, or the Devils giving of Oracles, foretelling things to come; which is another imitation of what the Lamb or Chriſt had done, who left the power of prophecy in his Church after his Aſcenſion, as he ſaith of the Paraclete, he ſhall ſhew you things to come, and as S. Paul ſaith, Epheſ. 4. 11. that for the founding and confirming a Church, Chriſt gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, &c.

i. V. 13. Maketh fire come down———] The firſt of theſe horns or powers, being ſhew'd to be the power of miracles wrought by the Magicians through the power of the Devil, contains under it all the deceitful wonders wrought by Sorcerers in thoſe times; and the ſtrangeſt of all theſe that were by any of them pretended to, was this of making fire deſcend from heaven, in imitation of Elias, as Jannes and Jambres did by their magick ſome miracles after Moſes. And this is particularly related by Philoſtratus of Apollonius Tyaneus, l. 5. c. 5. that he called down fire from heaven. And this is a ſignal evidence that theſe Sorcerers were this ſecond beaſt.

k. V. 14. Make an image to the beaſt.] The deſign of theſe Sorcerers to advance Heatheniſm by that means, and to oppoſe Chriſtianity, and the ſucceſsfulneſs of their attempt, ſo far as to incenſe the Emperors againſt the Chriſtians, and to engage them to favour and encourage Heatheniſm or Idolatry, is ſufficiently known in ſtory, and appears by that book of Hierocles, (to which we have Euſebius's anſwer, though the book it ſelf be not extant) wherein he compares Chriſt and Apollonius, the Evangeliſts the writers of Chriſt's ſtory, and Philoſtratus the writer of Apollonius's life, and prefers Apollonius and Philoſtratus very much before the other. And this is the meaning of v. 12. he did all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, that is, he confirmed men in the belief and practice of all the heathen worſhip which was then a-foot; and as it follows, makes all the inhabitants of the land, that is, the generality of the Roman Empire, to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe wound had been cured, that is, to continue thoſe heathen worſhips of Jupiter Capitolinus, and the like, which ſeemed to have been ſhaken by the burning, but were ſetled again by the re-edifying of the Capitol. And not only ſo, but, as here 'tis added, he ſaith to the inhabitants of the land, that is, commands them, ποιῆσαι εἰκόνα τῷ θηρίῳ ὃ ἔχει τὴν πληγὴν τῆς μαχαίρας, καὶ ἔζησε, to make an image to the beaſt which hath the ſtroke of the ſword, and lived. That that Beaſt which hath the ſtroak of the ſword, and yet lived, is the beaſt v. 1. one of whoſe heads was wounded to death, and the πληγὴ θανάτου, mortal wound (all one here with πληγὴ τῆς μαχαίρας, ſtroke of the ſword) was cured, is manifeſt; and that hath been cleared to denote the heathen worſhip, as it then ſtood at Rome, the prime part of which was the worſhip of Jupiter Capitolinus. The only difficulty then is, what is the εἰκὼν, image of this beaſt. And firſt, it may ſignifie the inventing and introducing of ſome other heathen worſhips or temples beſides thoſe, yet agreeable and like unto thoſe which they had already: And to that ſenſe may be applied what we read of Domitian, his adding of new Deities, and erecting Flavia templa, Flavios Sacerdotes, of which, ſaith Martial, l. 8. Epigr. 80.

Πληγὴ μαχαίρας.

Πληγὴ θανάτου.

Εἰκὼν τοῦ θηρίου.

Sic nova dum condis, renovas, Auguſte, priora, Debentur quæ ſunt, quæque fuere tibi.

Whilſt he built new temples, and re edified the former, both were to be acknowledged due to him, what now are, and what were before. But there is one objection againſt this interpretation, viz. that as this ſecond beaſt (Sorcery, or the Magicians,) is ſaid at the beginning of the verſe to deceive thoſe that dwell on the land, ſo this beaſt ſaith to the inhabitants of the land, ποιῆσαι εἰκόνα, that they ſhould make the image. And there is no reaſon to think that κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, the inhabitans of the land, ſhould denote Domitian the Emperor. What ἡ γῆ ſignifies we have oft explained, not the earth, but the land, that is, the whole region or dominion; and that to be defined by the Context. While the diſcourſe was about the Jews, there it ſignified conſtantly Judæa, and the reſt of the Tetrarchies, all Palæſtine; and now in this chapter (ſee Note b.) the diſcourſe is about the Romans, it muſt by analogy ſignify the whole Roman Empire, as οἰκουμένη, the world, which ſometimes ſignifies Palæſtine, elſewhere ſignifies the Roman Empire (ſee Note on Mat. 24. e.) And conſequently οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, the inhabitants on the land, will ſignifie ver. 7. and here, the Princes and people of the other regions, within the compaſs of the Roman Dominion; and then moſt probably the meaning of the verſe will be, that by the deceits of theſe Magicians, Apollonius, &c. (who, as Philoſtratus makes it evident, went about all the regions, and did their wonders, and drew men after them) the people of all thoſe countries were perſwaded to admit the like worſhips (and build the like Temples) to thoſe in the Capitol at Rome, which may be meant by the θαυμάζειν ὀπίσω, to wonder after the beaſt (ſee Note b.) that is, to receive univerſally the worſhip of Jupiter, and to build Temples to him. As for the conceit, that Achilles's ghoſt, which Apollonius in Philoſtratus is ſaid to have raiſed, ſhould be the image of the beaſt here, or that the image of Apollonius himſelf, which his ſcholars appointed to be worſhipped, ſhould be it, there are many inconveniencies which lie againſt either of theſe interpretations. This which we have ſet down is moſt ſimple, and agreeable to the Context.

Οἰκουμένη.

Οἰκουμένῃ.

V. 15. Life.] That πνεῦμα ſignifies breath, not life, is ſufficiently known, and conſequently, to give breath muſt be to enable to ſpeak, as it here follows; and to give this to the image of the beaſt (in the notion of that forementiond, Note k.) muſt ſignifie to deviſe arts by which Oracles were now given, or the Devils raiſed to give Reſponſes in thoſe other places where theſe Roman worſhips had been received. That the Oracles at Cumæ, at Dodona, at Delphos, in all Bœotia, and in moſt other places, were become dumb before this time, is acknowledged by all heathen writers: and Plutarch's diſcourſes of that ſubject are very conſiderable to ſhew the influence that the Christian faith had on this, and how Idol worship lost much of its reputation by this means. These Augurs then and heathen Priests, as they did undertake to divine by looking into entrails of sacrifices, and by many other ways, so did they contrive the delivering of Oracles in new places, as in Pontus by Æsculapius, and the like, as may be seen in Lucian's Pseudomantis. This practice continued publick as long as the Emperors continued Pagan, and afterwards more privately: But about the time to which this Vision belongs, that is, in the reign of Domitian (as also of Trajan and Adrian) upon the great defection of Oracles, the Devil in these his agents was most active to repair the loss by setting up new Impostures in this kind; and this as a branch or effect of that Prophetick Power signified by the second horn (of this second beast) like unto the lamb, ver. 11. and to this must be applied that in the end of that verse, subjoined immediately to the mention of the two horns ἐλάλει ὡς Δράκων, the second beast spake (that is, these Augurs prophesie, or delivered Oracles) as the Dragon; First, Wickedly and cruelly, for the advancing of Satan's kingdom, as when by this means they stirred up the Emperor and his Officers against the Christians. See Lucian in Pseudomant. concerning Alexander the Magician. And so saith Baronius, An. 272. § 20. the Gentile-Priests did out of the Oracles of the Sibyls incense the Emperors against the Christians. Secondly, Cunningly, doubtfully giving their Responses in obscure forms, veiling their predictions in equivocal speeches, as the Devil, that knows some futures, and guesseth at others, is wisely and politically wont to do. The former of these seems chiefly to be meant by ὡς Δράκων, as the Dragon, because in this v. 15. after the Image of the beast speaking, is immediately added, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

Ελάλει ὡς Δράκων.

Ποιῆσαι ἵνα ἀποκτανθῶσι

V. 16. A mark in their right hand.] The giving χαράγματα, marks in the right hand or forehead was ordinary in Syria and the neighbour countries, not as a brand or στίγμα (as it is among others, by way of punishment; see Gal. 6. 17.) but as a note of servants, or to discriminate the servants of one Master from another. These marks were either in their right hands (or arms, or wrists, as χεὶρ oft signifies, and not only the hand, which is ἀκρόχειρ, see Mark 7. Note a.) or in their foreheads: στίγματα δὲ τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ εἶναι, saith Julian, marks of soldiers are in their hands or wrists; and Lucian de dea Syr. hath στίζεσθαι ἐπὶ χερσὶν, to be marked on the wrists. So that to cause all to receive this mark, is to force all to the receiving these Idol worships; and the way of forcing them is specified ver. 17. ἵνα μή τις δύνηται ἀγοράσαι ἢ πωλῆσαι, that no man might buy or sell, that would not; that is, incensing the Emperor and his Officers in the provinces to make interdicts against Christian assemblies, and to proceed severely and capitally against all that used any but these heathen Idol-worships. This whole passage seems to allude to the tyranny of Ptolemæus Philopator upon the Jews in the third of the Maccabees, Περιῆλθε δημοσίᾳ κατὰ τὸ ἔθνος διαδῦναι φόβον, καὶ δὴ τὸ κατὰ τὸν αὐλὼν πύργῳ στήλῳ ἀναστήσας ἐξεκόλαψε, μυσέντα τῶν μὴ θυόντων εἰς τὰ ἱερὰ αὐτῶν εἰσιέναι, πάντας δὲ τοὺς Ἰουδαίους εἰς λαογραφίαν καὶ ἐγκύκλιον διάθεσιν ἀχθῆναι ——— τούτους τε ἀπογραφομένους χαράσσεσθαι, καὶ διὰ πυρὸς εἰς τὸ σῶμα θεσπίμῳ Διονύσου κισσοφύλλῳ— He made an edict to bring disgrace upon the nation, and upon a tower joining to the court he erected a pillar, and engraved on it, that no man should enter, but those who sacrificed after the heathen manner to their gods, and that all the Jews should be forced to be enrolled and put in a servile condition, and that those that were enrolled should be marked also with fire upon their body with Bacchus's Ensign, an Ivy-leaf. Which passage seems to be taken notice of by the Author of the Ετυμολογικὸν μέγα, who speaks of Ptolemæus Philopator marking men διὰ τὸ φύλλα κισσοῦ, with Ivy leaves. All which we see signifies the marking them out as servants with the ensign of their heathen god Bacchus, as here with the mark of the beast, that is, of Idol-worship.

m. Χάραγμα.

V. 17. Name of the beast.] Beside the mark of the beast, here is mention'd the name of the beast, and the number of the name, which are in like manner to be received on their wrists, or foreheads, as the mark was; for so the construction carries it, He causeth all ἵνα δῶσιν αὐτοῖς, that he may give them a mark, ver. 16. And that no man should buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name, or the number of the name. Where, as their having a mark given them is all one with receiving and having it, so the having the name, and number of the name of the beast, must be all one with their receiving it. And then this will signifie no more than the several ways whereby servants or worshippers of the heathen Idols were innitiated, or received, and discriminated from others; first by a mark or ensign of that God whose worship it was, an Ivy-leaf for Bacchus (from whence they were called thyrsigeri, and καθηκορβεῖοι) and the like; Secondly, by the name of the God engraved on them, as Φοίβου, Διόνυσου, Apollo, Bacchus, &c. and therefore, c. 14. v. 11. we have χάραγμα τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, which must there best be rendred, the engraving of his name; Thirdly, by numeral letters, which make up the same sum that the name of the God makes, which is but a mystical or cabalistical way of having the name understood by them that use it, but not easily understood by any man else. Of these Servius on Virgil makes frequent mention: And Martianus Capella mentions XN as the mystical name of the Sun, that is, the number of the name. And an example of this manner of describing a God, even Christ himself, hath been set down from the Sibylline Oracles, Note on 1 Pet. 4. f. Having gone thus far, it is now observable that these four phrases, worshipping the image of the beast, ver. 15. having the mark of the beast, having the name of the beast, having the name of the number of the beast, are all here used in the same matter, (as things commanded under severe interdicts, either capital punishment, ἵνα ἀποκτανθῶσι, that they may be kill'd, that do it not, or expulsion from humane society, that they may not buy or sell, but be discommuned) and perhaps thus differently expressed to set down the several degrees of complying with Heathenism, that the persecutions brought Christians to, known and mention'd by the ancients, that is, the several species of the Lapsi; first, Apostatæ, Apostates, that openly renounced the Christian Religion; secondly, Sacrificati, they that sacrificed to Idol-gods; thirdly, Thurificati, they that burnt incense to them; fourthly, Libellatici, they that received tickets to acknowledge that they had done so, though they had not; which being in respect of the scandal of it, and by way of interpretation, all one with having sacrificed, may properly be expressed by receiving the number of the beasts name, which is in effect all one with receiving his name or mark.

V. 18. Here is wisdom.] What ὧδε ἡ Σοφία ἐστὶν, here is wisdom, signifies, is somewhat uncertain. It may refer to God; Herein is Wisdom shewed, that as the heathen Priests veil the names of their gods in secret numbers, so God hath here set down in cypher the name of that heathen god whose worship is by these Edicts prescribed. And then that which follows, ὁ τὸν νοῦν ἔχων ψηφισάτω, let him that hath understanding count, or reckon, will be no more than, Let him that knows what belongs to mystical expressions of names by numbers take notice of this number now given him, and he shall find how it fits the event. But it is also possible that the phrase, here is wisdom, may refer only to man: 'Tis an act of special wisdom to do it: and then to that sense will be agreeable what follows, Let him that hath understanding cast the account; where again the wisdom and understanding may either signifie skill and sagacity to find out the meaning of this mystery, or else prudence to manage it wisely, that it shall bring no danger upon him, it being that which was not fit publickly to be discovered, but if any man had the skill to discern it, he would, if he were were wiſe, reckon it to himſelf, and ſay nothing, not diſcover that openly which might bring danger or perſecution along with it. To this purpoſe 'tis obſervable, that in the firſt ages of the Church (which were moſt likely to have underſtood and given us light in it) they made no conjectures about it; and 'tis Irenæus's ſaying, that if in his time it were fit publickly to be declared, δι' ἐκείνου ἂν ἐῤῥέθη τῷ καὶ τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν ἑωρακότι, ὐ γὰρ πρὸ πολλοῦ χρόνου ἑωράθη, ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν ἐπὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας γενεᾶς, πρὸς τῷ τέλει τῆς Δομετιανοῦ ἀρχῆς, It would have been declared by him that ſaw the Revelation, for that was but a litte while ago, almoſt in our age, about the end of Domitian's reign. Intimating, that the reaſon of S. John's not diſcovering it was ſomewhat proper to thoſe times, that is, ſurely, becauſe ſomebody that lived in his time, or was ſuddenly to come, was concerned in it. It will now, at this diſtance of ſo many hundred years, be more difficult for us to find it out, and leſs advantageous to afflict our minds in the ſearch of it. That conceit of Iræneus, that the number is to be found out by the Greek account of letters, hath been taken for the rule by which the work muſt be wrought, and ſo the Greek Alphabet hath had all the applications made to it to expound this riddle: whereas firſt, theſe kind of Arithmetical myſteries were not ordinary among the Greeks of that age; and ſecondly, the Greeks had anciently another way of numbering, beſide that of the letters of the Alphabet in their order, viz. by ſix letters only taken out of the Alphabet, which did comprehend all numbers: And who knows whether that be not the way of numbering by which the operation is to be wrought? And thirdly, it is much more probable, that S. John had reſpect to the Hebrew cuſtom of finding out myſteries in the number of letters, that being very uſual among the Rabbines of that age, under the name of Ghematria, which was a myſterious and abſtruſe art; and, in their account a ſpecial depth of wiſdom among them. Whatever this number is, 'tis ſomewhat, which as a note of diſcrimination, is impoſed, v. 16. on all men of that time and place, whereof that viſion treats, and which ſome had upon them, v. 17. was received by ſome, ch. 14. 11. and not received by others, ch. 20. 4. All this and much more might be ſaid, to demonſtrate it unreaſonable to take any pains in finding out the preciſe name, whereof this of 666 is the numeral expreſſion. The ſenſe of the verſe and the whole paſſage is clear without it, that the heathen Prieſts, and Augurs, and Sorcerers, ſhould incenſe the Emperor againſt the Chriſtians in all the Provinces, and cauſe them to make edicts of great ſeverity againſt all that did not ſome way comply with their heathen worſhips. And I ſhall not trouble the Reader with any (as more ſcrupulous, ſo) uncertain enquiries.

CHAP. XIV.

Paraphraſe.

1. AND [a] I looked, and lo a lamb ſtood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thouſand, having his fathers name written in their foreheads.]

1. Here is another viſion, or another branch of the former. And methought I ſaw the lamb, that is, Chriſt, on mount Sion, in the Chriſtian Church, and with him all thoſe conſtant pure Chriſtian Jews, ch. 7. openly and conſtantly profeſſing the truth. a.

2. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps.]

2. And again methought I heard a voice from heaven as the voice of many waters, &c. that is, the Goſpel preached aloud among the Gentiles, and a multitude of Gentile Chriſtians (ſee ch. 7. 9.) a rejoicing together.

3. And they ſung as it were a new ſong before the throne, and before the four * beaſts, and the Elders: and no man could learn that ſong, but the hundred and forty and four thouſand which were redeemed from the † earth.]

* Living creatures, ζῶων. † Land, γῆς.

3. And theſe, methought, were ſinging of praiſe to God (fitting, as he was before repreſented, ch. 4. 2. after the manner of the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, with the four Apoſtles, and the four and twenty Biſhops of Judæa in council with him) and this ſong being a thankſgiving to God through Chriſt (and ſo call'd a new ſong, according to that tradition of the Jews on Pſal. 96. 1. that whereſoever the new ſong is mentioned, it refers to the age of the Meſſias) for vouchſafing them to be perſecuted and ſuffer for his name (ſee Acts 5. 41.) none could join with them in it, but the hundred and forty and four thouſand, that is, thoſe pure Jew-Chriſtians, that had kept themſelves conſtant and ſpotleſs from the pollutions of the world, like them.

4. Theſe are they which were not defiled with women, for they are virgins: theſe are they which follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth: theſe were redeemed from among men, * being the firſt fruits unto God, and to the Lamb.]

* A firſt-fruit, ἀπαρχή.

4. Theſe are they which had kept pure from all the heretical Gnoſtick corruptions of uncleanneſs, &c. (ſee note on ch. 2. n.) and that held out conſtant againſt all terrors of perſecutions, and ſo were reſcued from the ſins of that wicked age, the pure primitive Chriſtians.

5. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.]

5. That never fell off to any falſe Idolatrous, or heretical practice, but ſerved God blameleſs.

6. And I ſaw another Angel flie in the midſt of heaven, having the [b] everlaſting † Goſpel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people;]

6. And methought I ſaw another Angel, none of thoſe before mentioned, flying or haſtning about the world, carrying good news with him, happy tidings for the time to come, to all nations, Jews and Gentiles, viz. to the Chriſtians of all. b.

7. Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worſhip him that made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and the fountains of waters.]

7. And thereupon admoniſhing all now to ſtand out firmly and conſtantly, to adhere to the true God and the Chriſtian faith, in oppoſition to the heathen idolatry, which ſhould now ſhortly be deſtroyed.

8. And there followed another Angel, ſaying, [c] * Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, becauſe ſhe made all nations drink of the † wine of the wrath of her fornications.]

[c] She is fallen, ſhe is fallen, Babylon the city, the great.

8. And as ver. 7. it was foretold that Idolatry ſhould ſuddenly be deſtroyed, ſo preſently another Angel, methought, brought me news that 'twas done, that that whole impure city of Rome heathen, under the title of Babylon (ſee note on ch. 18. a.) that old heathen, idolatrous city, that had lain ſo heavy upon the people of God, a numerous populous city, and in each of theſe reſpects fitly expreſſing this) was, that is, ſhould ſpeedily be deſtroyed, for advancing the heathen worſhip, and perſecuting all that would not join in it. c.

9. And the third Angel followed them, ſaying with a loud voice, If any man worſhip the beaſt, and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, and in his hand.

9. And methought a third Angel followed, on purpoſe to confirm all weak ſeduced perſecuted Chriſtians, and to fortifie them in their patience and conſtancy under the preſent, or yet remaining perſecutions (ver. 13.) and this he did by denouncing the judgments that the inconſtant ſhould fall under, the direful ruine which attended all apoſtatizing, complying Chriſtians, that (after the manner of the Gnoſtick compliers) for fear of perſecutions, had or ſhould forſake the Chriſtian purity, and joyn in the worſhips or practices of heathen Rome; denouncing poſitively, that whoſoever ſhould do ſo, (ſee note on chap. 13. m. n.)

10. The

d. 10. He ſhould have his portion with heathen Rome, in the bitter puniſhments, or effects of God's wrath, ſuch as fell upon Sodom and Gomorrah, Chriſt being the Judge, and the Angels the Executioners of it.

10. The ſame ſhall drink of d the * wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation, and he ſhall be tormented with fire and brimſtone in the preſence of the holy Angels, and in the preſence of the Lamb.]

11. Even utter deſtruction to all that ſhall have been guilty of this in any degree (ſee ch. 13. note n.) and do not timely repent of it.

11. And the ſmoak of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no reſt day nor night who worſhip the beaſt and his image, and whoſoever receiveth the † mark of his name.]

† Engraving, χάραγμα. See note on ch. 13. n.

12. And herein ſhall the ſincerity of mens hearts appear and be made manifeſt by the bloody perſecution now approaching, ver. 13. if they ſhall venture any perſecutions from the heathens, rather than thus fall off, and deny Chriſt, if, whatever the hazard be, they ſhall adhere cloſe to the precepts of Chriſtian conſtancy, and the purity of Chriſtian practice, and neither really nor ſeemingly comply with the perſecutors.

12. Here is the patience of the Saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jeſus]

e. 13. And to that purpoſe there came a voice from heaven, ſaying, That there ſhould now come a great trial indeed, (viz. in the times of Diocleſian that cruel tyrant) and the perſecutions ſhould lie ſo heavy on the Chriſtians within a while, that they ſhould be happy that were well dead, who were come to enjoy their reward of peace and bliſs, and are not left on earth for ſuch combats and ſtorms as theſe.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven ſaying unto me, Write, Bleſſed are the dead † which die in the Lord e from henceforth; yea, ſaith the Spirit, that they may reſt from their labours, and their works do follow * them.]

* With them, μετ' αὐτῶν.

f. 14,15. And preſently upon this viſion of thoſe ſharp perſecutions (which generally were means to call down God's judgments on the perſecutors) methought I ſaw a bright ſhining cloud, and one like Chriſt upon it, in a regal attire, with a ſicle in his hand (all this noting the judgments and exciſion of heathen Rome, which in reſpect of their cruelty againſt the Chriſtians and their other heathen ſins was now, as a field of corn, ready for harveſt. And another Angel called to him, and bad him proceed immediately to this exciſion, their ſins being come to maturity, and having fitted them for deſtruction.

14. And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one ſat like unto the Son of man, having on his head f a golden crown, and in his hand a ſharp ſicle:

15. And another Angel came out of the Temple, crying with a loud voice to him that ſat on the cloud, Thruſt in thy ſicle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harveſt of the earth † is ripe.]

† Is dried, ἐξηράνθη.

16. And he did accordingly, and this vengeance befel heathen Rome.

16. And he that ſat on the cloud thruſt in his ſicle on the earth, and the earth was reaped.]

17. And another Angel or officer of Chriſt's vengeance was ſent out by him on the ſame errand, and methought he came from God in heaven, as out of the ſanctuary, the place where incenſe is offered (an effect of the prayers of the Saints again) with a ſharp ſicle in his hand, an emblem of exciſion.

17. And another Angel came out of the Temple which is in heaven, he alſo having a ſharp ſicle.]

g. 18. And another Angel came from the altar of burnt offerings, by which the wicked are repreſented, having the execution of God's wrath upon the wicked intruſted to him, and he cried aloud to him that had the ſharp ſicle, and bid him ſet about this work as if it were a time of vintage, cutting down the cluſters of grapes of the vine of the land, that is, deſtroying this idolatrous cruel city and people, as having filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, and being now full ripe for ſlaughter.

18. And another Angel came out from the Altar, which had g power over fire, and cried with a loud cry to him that had the ſharp ſicle, ſaying, Thruſt in thy ſharp ſicle, and gather the cluſters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe.]

19. And accordingly 'twas done, theſe obdurate ſinners ripe for judgment, were terribly deſtroyed, cut down, and caſt like ripe grapes into a wine-preſs, the wrath of God falling ſadly upon them.

h. 20. And this extended not only to the city of Rome, but to other parts of the Empire, wherein Chriſtianity had been perſecuted, and a moſt bloody ſlaughter there was among them.

20. And the wine-preſs was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine preſs, even unto the horſe-bridles, by the ſpace of h a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs.]

a. Εἶδον, εἶδε δεύτερον. V. 1. I looked, and lo a lamb——] The ſum of this enſuing viſion, and the propriety of it to this part of the ſtory, is here fit to be ſet down as preparative to the interpretation of it: and it is this; The ſtate of heathen Rome being ſet down in the former chapter, as it was in Domitian's time, that time of perſecuting of Chriſtianity, and reviving of Heatheniſm (that had loſt a little of its luſtre) here is now a general view given of all that is more largely ſet down in the 16, 17, 18. chapters, that is of all from Domitian to Conſtantine, or the prediction in groſs of what is there particularly executed; juſt as the ſixth chapter was the repreſentation of the ſeveral degrees by which the Jews Polity came to its diſſolution, and the premiſing in ſhort what was afterwards to be acted on the Jews in the following chapters. And as there the total deſtruction of the Jewiſh ſtate is chiefly inſiſted on, from v. 12. to the end, ſo here in this, the period of the Roman idolatrous power, and the deſtruction thereof by an immenſe effuſion of blood is deſcribed, from v. 14. to the end; but preparatory to that, a deſcription of the pure, conſtant, primitive Chriſtians, in the firſt five verſes; an Angel declaring happy tidings to the whole Chriſtian Church for the time to come, and requiring them to walk in a religious fear, and to give glory to God, becauſe he would now appear and judge their perſecutors, v. 6, 7. Then another Angel foretelling the deſtruction of heathen Rome, v. 8. and another, the bitter puniſhments and utter ruine of apoſtatizing, complying Chriſtians, v. 9, 10, 11. then a declaration from heaven, that moſt ſore perſecutions ſhould fall upon the Church immediately before this happy change, ſo that they ſhould be happy who were well dead, and were come to enjoy their reward, and not left to undergo ſo ſore a trial, v. 13. And this to point at the time of perſecution under Diocleſian, Maximian, Herculius, Maximian Armentarius, Maximinus, Maxentius, Licinius, which was long and moſt ſharp.

b. Εὐαγγέλιον. V. 6. Everlaſting Goſpel.] that the word Εὐαγγέλιον ſignifies good news, and by a figure only is appropriated to the Goſpel, (as being moſt eminently ſuch) is ſufficiently known. And therefore here in all probability it muſt be taken in the native ſenſe, and denote ſimply good tidings. And what they are, appears v. 7. where the words of this good news are, The day of God's judgments are come, the former words fear God, and give him praiſe, being the preface to it. Which though they are a ſad proclamation of Judgment, and ill news to the impenitent, yet they are a ſpecial piece of good news to the pious, conſtant confeſſors, that fear God, and confeſs and give him praiſe, that is, couragiouſly confeſs him, whatſoever the danger be, (for ſo δοξάζειν Θεὸν, to praiſe God ſignifies, 1 Pet. 4. 16.) Now for the addition of Αἰώνιον to Εὐαγγέλιον, that ſure muſt ſignifie this good news to be ſuch, as not only

only the preſent but future ages were concern'd in. Thus was this (here mention'd) the freeing of the Chriſtian Church from publick univerſal perſecution of the heathen power, which was to be afforded at the time pointed at in this Viſion, that is, at the fall of Babylon, v. 8. For after that the heathen perſecution was taken off by Conſtantine, there never came any ſuch univerſal perſecution, but that in one place or other Chriſtians have had the benefit and liberty of aſſemblies. And though it cannot abſolutely be affirmed, that there can never come ſuch univerſal perſecution, yet in that this flouriſhing eſtate hath continued the thouſand years, c. 20. 11. it may well carry the name of Εναγγέλιον αἰώνιον, the everlaſting good news, in proportion to what we read of the puniſhment of the heathen perſecutors, whoſe ſmoak is ſaid to endure for ever and ever, Rev. 19. 3. That the devil ſhall be let looſe again, after this everlaſting good news, is affirmed, c. 20. 7. But then not Babylon (whoſe deſtruction here is the ſubject of this good news) but Gog and Magog ſhall encompaſs the camp of the Saints, and the beloved city, c. 20. 9. And though Gog and Magog in the Ottoman family hath over-ran that part of the Church, yet in other places, to which the Roman power did never extend, that loſs is repaired by the acceſſion of Chriſtian Princes that reign in Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Poland, Ruſſia, &c. ſo that ſtill it may be εναγγέλιον αἰώνιον in the largeſt ſenſe, as good news concerning all future time, as when Daniel propheſies that the Saints of the moſt High ſhall poſſeſs the kingdom for ever and ever, c. 7. 18.

c. Βαβυλὼν. V. 8. Babylon is fallen.] That by Babylon heathen Rome is ſignified in theſe Viſions, ſhall be ſhew'd at large, Note on c. 18. a. Here only it will be obſervable, Firſt, why it is called the city, the great, (for ſo ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη, is beſt rendred) viz. firſt, in reſpect of her dominion, ſee c. 17. 18. that great city which reigneth over the Kings of the earth; and accordingly it was generally known by that title of Urbs Domina trix, Regno ſuperba, Sanctorum debellatrix, &c. the Imperial city, Proud of her dominion, the ſubduer and deſtroyer of the Saints.

in Rutilius Numatian, the beautiful Queen of thy world. So in Cicero 'tis Lux orbis terrarum, the light of the world; Ἄστρον τ κοινὸν τ ὅλης οἰκεμένης, in Marcianus Heracleota, the common ſtar of the whole world; Regina & Domina in Julius Frontinius, the Queen and Ruler of the world. Secondly, for the large circuit of the city, to which purpoſe this teſtimony of Athenæus is worth obſerving, lib. 1. Ἐπιλείποι δ' ἄν γε ἡ ἡμέρα μία ἐξαριθμούμενος τὰς ἐν τῇ Ῥωμαίων οὐρανοπόλει Ῥώμῃ ἀριθμουμένας πόλεις, ἀλλὰ πᾶσαι αἱ κατὰ τ ἐνιαυτὸν ἀριθμούμεναι, διὰ τὸ πλῆθος, If I ſhould reckon the cities that are numbred in Rome that heaven-city of the Romans, not only one day would fail me, but as many days as make up a year, the number of them is ſo great. Secondly, why this title of Babylon is here adapted to it, viz. to keep a ſpecial decorum, obſervable in theſe Viſions, in repreſenting the Chriſtian Church by the ancient Jewiſh. This is obſervable in many leſſer particulars, but moſt eminently in this deſcription of her Perſecutors. There were three moſt remarkable calamities that fell upon the ſeed of Iſrael; The bondage in Ægypt, the Captivity in Babylon, the Perſecution of Antiochus. And the like is propheſied in this book to befal Chriſtians. Firſt, Miſeries by Jewiſh perſecution, and therefore Jeruſalem is called Ægypt. Rev. 11. 8. The ſecond by Roman Idolatry, which is therefore called Babylon here, and c. 17. and c. 18. And the third, when the Devil is let looſe, by Gog and Magog, Rev. 20. 8. which are moſt perfectly parallel to Antiochus, (ſee the Paraphraſe there.) And there is little reaſon of doubting but theſe alluſions were intended, and there is great decorum and method therein, which ought to be carefully attended.

d. Οἴνου θυμοῦ. V. 10. The wine of the wrath——] That χολὴ and θυμὸς are all one, that they both promiſcuouſly ſignifie thoſe intoxicating poiſoning mixtures which were put into wine, hath been ſhew'd in Note on Mat. 27. f. And agreeably to that notion, οἶνος θυμοῦ is applied in this chapter to ſignifie two things, abominable ſin, and intolerable puniſhment. The former of them in the 8th Verſe is joined with πορνείας, fornication, and 'tis the ſame in effect which it would be if the words had been οἴνου ἐσμυρνισμένου τ πορνείας, a myrrhate (bitter poiſonous) cup of fornication. Then for puniſhment 'tis here uſed ver 10. being ſpoken of God, οἴνου τ θυμοῦ τ θεοῦ· not as if θυμὸς ſignified wrath, (any more than the ſame word could ſignifie ſo ver. 8. where 'tis applied to Fornication) but again as θυμὸς and χολὴ are all one, and as they ſignifie all thoſe poiſonous bitter mixtures put into wine; and ſo οἶνος τ θυμοῦ τ θεοῦ is God's myrrhate cup of puniſhments, which he there threatens to pour out on them, expreſſed again in that that follows, κεκερασμένου ἀκράτου, mix'd unmix'd; Ἄκρατος being the word to ſignifie wine not mingled with water, merum, ſtrong wine, or red wine, (as חמר, which is rendred ἄκρατος, unmix'd, Pſal. 75. 9. ſignifies) and κεκερασμένος, mix'd, with theſe inebriating ſpices, meant by θυμὸς, which the Septuagint in that place of the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 75. 9. expreſs by πλήρης κεράσματος, full of mixture: and then both theſe put thus together are very proper to expreſs the cup of malediction (ſee Note on Mat. 27. f.) and conſequently the curſes and fierce puniſhments of God. Thus c. 16. 19. οἴνου θυμοῦ τ ὀργῆς αὐτοῦ, the bitter wine of his wrath, not the wine of the anger of his wrath. Many the like phraſes we find ſcattered in Authors; Κύνδυ πικρίας, in * Euſtathius; a cup of bitterneſs; κύπελλον ὀλέθρου, in Manaſſes, a cup of deſtruction; and again, συμφορῶν ὑπερχειλῆ τὸν ζκύφον, a cup of afflictions above brim full, and ἀψινθιάζουσα πικρὸν ἐκπιοῦσα κρᾶσπεδον, a bitter cup of the taſte of wormwood; and τὸ τῆς θυμοῦ ποτήριον, in † Nicetas Choniata. See Gaulmin on Euſtathius, p. 35.

e. Ἀπάρτι. V. 13. From henceforth.] The word ἀπάρτι, (be it ſo read, or ἀπ' ἄρτι in two words) ſignifies, ſaith Euthymius, within a ſhort time, not long after, quickly: ſee Note on Mat. 23. 39. and Mat. 26. 64. In both which (as here) the ancient Latin reads amodo, within a while. This verſe belongs to that which went immediately before, v. 12. ὧδε ὑπομονὴ τῶν ἁγίων ἐστὶ, here is the patience of the Saints, to ſignifie a time of perſecution (ſee ch. 13. 10.) And to that nothing can be more proper than this, that they are to be accounted happieſt that die ſooneſt, that within a while are taken out of this life, from having their part in the evil to come, Iſa. 57. 1. So Eccl. 4. upon mention of the oppreſſors and ſtrength on their ſide, and the no comforter v. 1. it follows, wherefore I praiſed the dead which are already dead, &c. v. 2. And to this belongs the anſwer of the Spirit in the words following, they ſhall have reſt from their κόπου, that is, from thoſe perſecutions which attend them here, (ſee Note on Heb. 3. c. 3.) and which only death can give them an end of.

f. Στέφανον χρύσεον. V. 14. A golden crown.] That the στέφανος χρύσεος, golden crown, is an enſign of Regal power, is ſufficiently known, and little doubt but here it is ſo, denoting that which in the New Teſtament is oft expreſs'd by the ſtyle of the kingdom of God, or Chriſt, the deſtroying and ſubduing of his enemies, it being the ſpecial part of the King's office, debellare ſuperbos, to ſubdue all that hold out againſt him. And as by the golden crown this regal office of Chriſt is here expreſſed, ſo by the δρέπανον ὀξύ, ſharp ſickle, the approach of that exerciſe of it; the ſickle referring to the ripe harveſt, when the reapers come armed to cut down the corn, and ſharpneſs denoting the preparedneſs of this inſtrument for that work, and withal the ſwiftneſs and univerſality of the exciſion, cutting the whole field down together. And the deſtruction of the Romans (that is, of the heathen part of that people) is here fitly repreſented by it. So in the Goſpel, in the Parable of the wheat and darnel, the harveſt was the time of the exciſion of the Jews. So Jer. 51. 33. Yet a little while and the time of her harveſt ſhall come, that is, of judgments and exciſion, before expreſs'd by,

Δρέπανον ὀξὺ

Θερισμὸς.

It

It is time to thresh her, to which reaping is preparative. And whereas in this chapter there are two ſickles, one to cut pown the corn, another the cluſters of grapes, both theſe ſorts of harveſts are to be ſeen, Joel 3. 13. and both for judgments on a people; Put ye in the ſickle, for the harveſt is ripe: Come, git ye down, for the preſs is full, the fats overflow, for wickedneſs is great. And the reaſon of the phraſe is clear, becauſe God's judgments being attendants and rewards of the ſins of men, when the meaſure of their ſins is filled up, they are then like to a field of ripe corn in time of harveſt, fit to be reaped, ready for God's vengeance to fall on them; or again to bunches or cluſters of grapes ready for the wine preſs. And ſo here at the point of time, repreſented in this part of the Viſion (the time of Diocleſian) the ſins of heathen Rome were fully ripe, ready for the vengeance of God, when their rage had continued a ſharp perſecution for ten years without intermiſſion, and pillars were erected to Diocleſian, as trophies that he had aboliſhed Chriſtianity, and enlarged Paganiſm. See Baronius Anno Dom. 304. § 8.

g. Ἐξουσίαν ἔχοντα πυρός.

V. 18. Power over fire.] The Θυσιαστήριον, Altar, here being that whereon the beaſts were offered, and thoſe beaſts to be burnt with fire, and that fire being a denotation of the wrath and vengeance of God againſt the wicked, this Angel coming from the Altar, and having power over fire, is conſequently a miniſter or executioner of God's wrath upon the wicked impenitents, who are thoſe beaſts to be ſacrificed to God, to be deſtroyed before him.

V. 20. A thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs.] That the thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs here do refer to the bounds or extent of Judæa, is the opinion of the Learned H. Grotius; and his proof for it is, becauſe S. Jerome, which had lived in thoſe parts, and examined it very accurately, affirms that Judæa was in length an 160 miles, which, accounting every mile to contain ten Greek Stadia, or furlongs, amounts to 1600 furlongs. But if it be firſt adverted that the wine-preſs is here ſaid to be trodden without the city, and the blood to have extended to this ſpace of 1600 furlongs; ſecondly, that Jeruſalem was in the midſt of the country, and conſequently that from thence to the utmoſt bounds of it the ſpace will be but half ſo much as is the longitude of all Judæa; this conjecture will not be ſo agreeable to this place. And therefore it will be more proper, and accordant to the Context, which ſpeaks not of Judæa, but of Rome, to apply it to the adjacent Regions about Rome, to repreſent the bloodineſs of the wars, and many battels that would in the times of Maximinus, Licinius, and Maxentius, lie ſo very heavily upon thoſe countries, which were parts of the Roman Empire, that they cannot be better expreſs'd than by the blood coming to the horſe-bridles, a vaſt effuſion of blood among the Romans.

CHAP. XV.

1. And I had another viſion concerning the judgments of God upon heathen Rome, and methought I ſaw ſeven Angels with ſeven plagues, all which were to come one after another, and between them to divide the tragedy, and act all God's vengeance upon them.

1. AND I ſaw another ſign in heaven, great and marvellous, ſeven Angels having the ſeven laſt plagues, for in them * is filled up the wrath of God.]

* Was filled up, or finiſhed, ἐτελέσθη.

2. And I ſaw as it were a ſea of glaſs mingled with fire, and them that had gotten the victory over the beaſt, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, ſtand on the ſea of glaſs, having the harps of God.]

2. And methought I ſaw a great multitude of pure zealous Chriſtians (the multitude noted by the ſea, their purity by glaſs, and their zeal by fire) that had not yielded to the heathen terrors in any the leaſt degree, but continuing conſtant in their purity, and ſtedfaſt confeſſion of faith. And they had in their hands harps, ſuch as were wont to be uſed in the Temple in God's ſervice, called the muſical inſtruments of God, 1 Chron. 16. 42.

3. And they ſung the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God † Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, O King of Saints.]

3. And they ſung to Chriſt the ſame ſong (or another after that pattern) that Moſes had done upon the victory and deliverance out of Ægypt, when the Ægyptians were overwhelmed in the ſea, noting their acknowledgment of God's goodneſs and mercy to them, who now, they ſaw, would puniſh and deſtroy the perſecuting heathen Emperors. And they magnified the mighty and wonderful works of God, his over-ruling power and fidelity in making good his promiſes to the Chriſtians his ſervants.

4. Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy name? for thou only art holy, for all nations ſhall come and worſhip before thee, for thy judgments are made manifeſt.]

4. And ſaid, Now ſhall all the men in the world be obliged to fear and dread thee, and withal to magnifie thy name. This is thine only work, O Lord; for the nations of the world, the Gentiles, the Roman Empire, ſhall at length convert to Chriſtianity upon the ſight of thy revenges upon them who had crucified Chriſt, both Jews and Romans.

5. And after that I looked, and behold, the a * Temple of the Tabernacle of the teſtimony in heaven was opened.]

5. And then methought I ſaw the Holy of Holies opened, thoſe great myſteries which had long lain hid, revealed, that is, the decrees of God concerning the Romans now ready to come forth.

6. And the ſeven Angels came out of the † Temple, having the ſeven plagues, cloathed in pure and white linnen, and having their breaſts girded with golden girdles.]

6. And the ſum of them was contained in ſeven plagues or puniſhments upon the Roman Empire, brought out by as many Angels in ſhining glorious habits, each reſembling the High-prieſt, ch. 1. 13. (ſee Note on Luke 12. b.) coming out of the oracle, ver. 5. ſent by God from his throne in heaven, to execute theſe judgments upon them.

7. And one of the four * beaſts gave unto the ſeven Angels ſeven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.]

• Living cr. Ζώων.

7. And one of the four living creatures (attending and encompaſſing God's throne, by which four Apoſtles were underſtood, c. 4. 6. and thoſe there having power to foretel things to come) was therefore repreſented to give to theſe ſeven Angels (executioners of God's wrath) ſeven vials full of the wrath of the eternal God, that is, to give them commiſſion for the pouring out of God's wrath upon heathen Rome.

8. And the Temple was filled with ſmoak from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the Temple, till the ſeven plagues of the ſeven Angels † were fulfilled.]

† Should be finiſhed, τελεσθῶσιν.

8. And the place where this viſion ſeemed to be, that is, the Sanctuary in heaven, ver. 5. was filled with ſmoak, as an expreſſion and conſequent of this fire of God's wrath and vengeance, which was like to prove ſo heavy, that the very repreſentation of it was unſupportable, no body could endure to come into the ſanctuary, whilſt that was repreſenting; noting that it would fall very terribly on all them that ſhould come within the reach of it.

a. Ὁ Ναὸς τῆς σκηνῆς.

V. 5. Temple of the Tabernacle.] What is here literally meant by ὁ ναὸς τῆς Σκηνῆς τοῦ μαρτυρίου, ordinarily rendred the Temple of the tabernacle of the teſtimony, may thus be collected, ; The tabernacle of the teſtimony clearly ſignifies that tabernacle among the Iſraelites in Moſes's time before the building of the Temple, called אהל מועד the tabernacle of meeting, Exod. 27. 21. and elſewhere the tabernacle of the teſtimony, Acts 7. 44. becauſe becauſe God was there pleaſed to exhibit himſelf, and give teſtimony of his preſence, Acts 27. 22. In that there were two regions; the firſt called the Sanctuary, the ſecond דביר or Oracle, the Holy of Holies: and this is here, and v. 6. called ναὸς, and ſo again ch. 16. 1, and 17. not as that ſignifies the whole Temple, but a part of the Tabernacle, viz. the Holy place, or Holy of Holies. What ναὸς elſewhere ſignifies, ſee Note on Acts 19. c. and Rev. 14. c. out of the Scholiaſt on Nazianzen στηλιευτ. ά. who diſtinguiſhes ναὸς in the Chriſtian Church from ζηκὸς and τέμενος: the two latter, ſaith he, ſignify ἱερὸν ὅλον, the whole Temple, or Church, but the former the place where the communion table ſtands, which being divided from the reſt of the Quire, is to that as the Holy of Holies to the Sanctuary. And in this ſenſe of ναὸς it is that Pſal. 82. 2. the vulgar Latine, and from thence the Engliſh in our Liturgy, read Temple, where the Hebrew have דביר, and from thence our Bibles read Oracle. Annotations on Chap. XVI.

a. ἡ γῆ καὶ θάλασσα καὶ ποταμοὶ

V. 2. Upon the earth] What is here meant by ἡ γῆν, and ἡ θάλασσα, and οἱ ποταμοὶ καὶ πηγαὶ, the earth, or land, and the ſea, and the rivers and fountains of waters, v. 2, 3, 4. may appear by v. 1. where the Angels are appointed to pour out their vials upon the earth or land. That in all reaſon ſignifies the Roman Empire, the thing repreſented in theſe Viſions, as before it ſignified the nation and people of the Jews, (ch. 7. Note b.) And there is no reaſon to affix any nice critical notation to either of theſe ſingle, that the land, v. 2. ſhould ſignify ſeverally, and ſo the ſea, v. 3. and the rivers, v 4. but to take all together for that which was meant by the land, v. 1. for ſo the ſeries here requires, where the Angels, that were commanded to pour out their vials on the earth, pour them out upon theſe three, evidently noting theſe three to be the diſtribution of that one, and ſo all one with it. So c. 14. 7. God is deſcribed as the Creator of the heaven, and earth, and ſea, and fountains of waters, where all thoſe latter three are ſet to denote that which is elſewhere ordinarily called the earth, and no more, in oppoſition to heaven, that is, this inferior, terreſtrial globe, and all in it. To this may be added, That when the judgments are repreſented to fall upon Judea, ſome are ſaid to fall on the land, others on the ſea, others on the trees, c. 7. not neceſſarily ſignifying ſuch a ſeparation of the judgments, ſome on this, ſome on that part, but the whole nation together, on which all thoſe judgments fell; and this indeed agreeable to what we read of the judgments that fell on Egypt, where tho' ſome of them were cauſed by the ſigns that Moſes wrought upon the land, Exod. 8. 16. others by ſmiting of the waters, ſtreams, rivers and ponds, and all their gathering together of waters, Exod. 7. 19. and ſo again, ch. 8. 5. yet 'tis manifeſt that the judgments thus produced by every of theſe, (each ſmiting of his rod there being proportionable to the pouring out of a vial here) fell indifferently on the whole land, and not one judgment on one part, another on another: And ſo ſure is it to be underſtood in this place. Many judgments were to be poured out upon the Roman Empire, and by all of them together the whole heathen part of it deſtroyed. This conſideration makes it unneceſſary farther to enquire into the productions of the ſeveral Vials, what each of them diſtinctly ſignified, it being ſufficient that each of them notes ſome kind of deſtruction; and the number of ſeven being a perfect number, the ſeven Angels, and their ſeven vials, and their ſeven effuſions ſignify utter deſtruction, and not neceſſarily any more, unleſs it be this, that it was not all at once, but by ſeveral degrees and ſeveral ſorts of judgments, thoſe that ordinarily bring deſtructions upon provoking people, that have filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, λοιμὸς, λιμὸς, πόλεμος, infectious diſeaſes, famines and wars: and that theſe in a very remarkable manner fell upon the Roman Empire about theſe times, appears as by all hiſtories Eccleſiaſtical and prophane, ſo eſpecially by S. Auſtin in his firſt books De civ. Dei, written on purpoſe to defend Chriſtian religion from that charge which was laid upon it, that it brought down all judgments upon the Empire. Which being falſe, as it was urged by the Heathens to the prejudice of Chriſtianity, viz. that the Judgments came for that ſin of permitting Chriſtianity in the Empire, and contempt of their Idol-worſhip; ſo was it moſt true, that for the heathens ſtanding out and perſecuting the Chriſtian faith, moſt heavy waſting judgments were come upon them. Of the three firſt Vials it may be yet further noted, that they may have a peculiar aſpect on the plagues of Egypt: the firſt, that of the Ἕλκος κακὸν καὶ πονηρὸν, the evil and grievous boil, that is, infectious, and very painful, will be anſwerable to the boil breaking out upon man and beaſt thro' all the land, Exod. 9. 9. and ſignify ſome infectious diſeaſe, plague and peſtilence, which we know breaks out in boils. So likewiſe the ſecond and the third, the ſea becoming as blood, ver. 3. and the rivers and fountains becoming as blood, ver. 4. are anſwerable to Moſes's ſtretching out his hand and ſmiting upon the waters of Egypt, their ſtreams, and their rivers, and their ponds, and all their poolls, or collections of water, upon which they became blood, Exod. 7. 19, 20. Now for theſe three the Hiſtories of thoſe times are very remarkable, viz. for the great peſtilences, and horrible effuſions of Blood. That which Herodian tells us of Commodus's reign, will ſufficiently qualify that for the time of the pouring out of theſe three vials. At that time, ſaith he, l. 1. a very great peſtilence reigned over all Italy, but eſpecially in the city of Rome, (and Dio tells us, that there died above two thouſand a day in the city) and a vaſt number both of beaſts and men periſhed thereby. And ſo this may be commodiouſly the pouring out the vial upon the earth, belonging not only to the city of Rome, but to all Italy, as ἡ γῆ the land, was wont to ſignify, not only Jeruſalem, but all Judea. Hereupon the Emperor was perſwaded to remove to Laurentum, ſo call'd from the grove of bay-trees there, the ſmell whereof the Phyſicians thought uſeful againſt the plague. And in like manner they preſcribed ſweet unguents and odours to anoint their ears and noſes, to keep

keep out or overcome the peſtilential vapour. But nevertheleſs, ſaith he, the diſeaſe daily encreaſed, and ſwept away a multitude of men and beaſts. As for the Αἷμα blood that was then ſpilt, the ſame Author gives us a large ſtory; Cleander, ſaith he, a ſervant of the Emperors, brought out of Phrygia, and grown up with him from his youth, and advanced to greateſt offices in court and army, aſpired to the Empire; To that purpoſe bought up a vaſt quantity of corn (which cauſed a great famine alſo at Rome) thinking thereby, in time of need to oblige the citizens and ſoldiers, and to gain them all to his party. But the event was contrary; for the famine raging, and the cauſe of it being viſible, all the citizens run out of the city to the Emperor, requiring this encloſer to be put to death. Cleander by his power keeping them from the Emperor (whoſe voluptuouſneſs made this eaſy for him to do) ſends out the Emperors forces arm'd and hors'd againſt them, which made an huge ſlaughter among them, and in driving them into the city gates, by their horſes and ſwords, ſaith he, meeting with foot-men unarm'd, they kill'd a great part of the people. Which when they that were in the city underſtood, they got to the top of the Houſes, and with ſtones and tiles threw at the ſoldiers, and by this means put them to flight, and in the purſuit beating them off from their horſes, killed great multitudes of them: and this continued very cruelly for ſome time. And the appeaſing of this coſt a great deal more blood, the Emperor cauſing Cleander to be put to death, and his ſons after him, and then a great many more, ſaith he, not daring to confide in any body. To which that author immediately adds the many Prodigies which followed at that time, and the burning down of the Temple of Peace; which beſide that it was the treaſury of a great part of the wealth of the city, and was accompanied with the burning of a great deal more of the buildings of the city, and among them of the Temple of Veſta, the Fire continuing for many days, till rain from Heaven put it out, (which made them impute the whole matter to the anger of the gods) beſides all this, I ſay, it was by all then look'd on as a preſage of great wars, which, ſaith he, accordingly followed. And ſo in this one paſſage of ſtory in that Author we have the interpretation of theſe three vials. As great a plague as ever hath been read of, to be ſuitable to the firſt; and a great deal of killing both in the ſedition, and by the cruelty of the Emperor, and by the fire, and by the wars that followed, (wherein the whole region, and not only the city of Rome was concerned) anſwerable to the two latter, the ſea, that is, the multitude of the city, and the Θάλασσα Ποταμοὶ καὶ πηγαὶ rivers and ſprings of waters, the other provinces and cities become blood. But beſide theſe under Commodus, there was ſtore of the like judgments in the following Emperors times, until Conſtantine: a very great Peſtilence under Gallus, another under Gallienus, both deſcribed by Zozimus; another at the end of Decius, on occaſion of which S. Cyprian wrote his book of Mortality. And in Maximinus's time, ſaith Euſebius, whilſt he and his armies were ſore diſtreſſed by a war with the Armenians, the reſt of the inhabitants of the cities were grievouſly devoured with famine and peſtilence, infinite numbers dying in the cities, more in the countries and villages, καὶ αἱ πάλαι τῶν ἀγροικῶν πολύανδροι ἀπογραφαι, and the numbers of huſbandmen which had formerly been very great, were almoſt all of them ſwept away by famine and peſtilence, ſaith Euſebius, Eccl. hiſt. l. 9. c. 8. And for wars and effuſion of blood and ſlaughters, the hiſtories are all along full of them, and need not be here recited.

h. V. 5. And ſhall be] Inſtead of ἐσόμενος, he that ſhall be the Copies generally read ὅσιος. That is anſwerable to the Hebrew חסיד pitiful and merciful, as that is more then צדקה δικαιοσύνη, juſtice or righteouſneſs, as hath oft been ſaid. And ſo it is fitly ſuperadded here to the δίκαιος εἶ thou art juſt or righteous, preceding. That the juſtice of God, here acknowledged in theſe vengeances on heathen Rome, denotes his punitive juſtice, there is no doubt, and accordingly follows, ὅτι ταῦτα ἔκρινας, becauſe thou haſt judged theſe. Where the ταῦτα ſeems to denote the perſons neutrally ſet down, the inhabitants of the Empire, which are here ſuppoſed to be judged, that is, juſtly puniſhed, and of whom it follows, ὅτι αἷμα ἁγίων καὶ προφητῶν ἐξέχεαν, becauſe they have ſhed the blood of thy ſaints and prophets, that is, of the Chriſtians, and thoſe that by their preaching would have wrought reformation among them, & ſo did act as Prophets, and had the portion of Prophets, were reſiſted and ſlain by them. But beſides this punitive juſtice expreſs'd by theſe judgments, there was alſo ὁσιότης, pity, compaſſion to the perſecuted Chriſtians, whoſe ſufferings were abated and taken off by this means. Thus 'tis often to be obſerved in Euſebius's ſtory, particularly at the end of the great ſlaughters, and famine, and plague in Maximinus's time, l. 9. c. 8. (mentioned Note a.) Hereupon, ſaith he, God, the defender of Chriſtians, having ſhew'd his wrath and indignation againſt all mortals for their perſecuting us, reſtored the pleaſant and bright ſplendor of his providence toward us, ſo that from that time peace and light, with the great admiration of all, ſhined out and was revealed to us that ſat in darkneſs before, ſhewing us that God hath the over-ſight of our affairs continually, chaſtiſing and afflicting us for a time, but after he hath diſciplin'd us ſufficiently, appearing favourable and propitious to us again.

Ταῦτα τὰ κρίνας

C. V. 8. With fire] If ἐν πυρὶ by fire were here literally to be underſtood, many completions there would be of it, by great fires, in the city of Rome eſpecially, within the ſpace referred to by this viſion. One remarkable one hath been mentioned in Commodus's time, Note a. out of Herodian, l. 1. falling on the Temple of Peace, and at length coming to the Temple of Veſta, and burning many great houſes, and ſo continuing for many days, till the rain from heaven put it out, and ſo by the heathens, ſaith he, conceived to be begun alſo, as it was ended, by the gods without humane means. And this being ſuch, coming from heaven, not from any lower cauſe, may the more probably belong to this place, where the ſun is ſaid to have power given it to ſcorch men with fire, the Sun in the firmament, the great fire of the world, being commodiouſly enough ſaid to ſcorch them, or to ſet them on fire (ſo καυματίζειν ſignifies) who were burnt by fire from heaven. But it is not improbable that the Suns ſcorching of men, denoted ordinarily by καῦμα, may ſignify that ſcorching and drying up the fruits of the earth from whence a dearth proceeds, and ſo be here ſet to expreſs a famine: ſo 'tis ſaid of the ſeed on the ſtony ground, that as ſoon as it ſprang up, ἐκαυματίσθη, it was ſcorched, and as it follows, ἐξηράνθη withered away. And many ſuch dearths there were in the ſtories of thoſe times. A moſt eminent one in Maximinus's time, mentioned by Euſebius, l. 9. c. 8. Some, ſaith he, for the leaſt bit of victuals, parting with that which was moſt precious to them: one meaſure of corn ſold for two thouſand five hundred Atticks: ſome καθ' ἁρπαγὴν in a little time ſelling all their poſſeſſions to buy bread: others eating graſs, and therewith poiſonous herbs. Noble women going out of the city to the country to beg bread. Others ſtaggering and falling down in the ſtreets, and howling out for one bit of bread, and able to ſpeak no word but that they were famiſh'd. And at length, the dogs raving for hunger, and falling upon the men, in their own defence they fell on killing and eating dogs. As ſad a deſcription of raging famine as hath been read of, ſave in time of ſieges. Another famine there was in Commodus's time (mention'd from Herodian, Note a.) which put the whole city into a ſedition, but that not comparable to this, and cauſed by Cleander's inſatiate covetouſneſs and ambition, more then the ſcorching of the Sun. That which here follows, as the effect of this famine, that they blaſphemed the name of God, may moſt probably be the heathens railing at the Chriſtians, as the cauſe of all their evils; for ſo the antients obſerve of them, that whenever plague or famine befel them, preſently they cried out, Chriſtiani ad leones, Let the Chriſtians be put to death, as the authors of their miſeries. An eminent place we have to this purpoſe in Arnobius, l. 10. where naming the very judgments which are here expreſs'd by the foregoing Vials, peſtilences, wars, and dearth or famines, he ſaith of the heathens, that when theſe befel them, they preſently cried out, that ſince Chriſtians began to be in the world, terrarum Orbem, periiſſe, the whole world was deſtroyed, and all mankind afflicted with all ſorts of evils: and S. Cyprian in that known place ad Demetrian, That many wars break out, that plagues and famines, that the earth is kept long without any rain nobis imputari, 'tis by the heathens imputed to us Chriſtians.

d. Θρόνος — V. 10. Seat of the beaſt] Θρόνος θηρίου, What the throne, ſeat, of the beaſt ſignifies, may thus be gathered; Θηρίον, the beaſt, ſignifies Idol-worſhip, c. 13. 1. and as the throne of that may ſignify the place where it reſides, ſo it may ſignify alſo that which ſuſtains and ſupports it, a ſeat being that which ſuſtains and holds up from falling that which reſts upon it. This was the power of the Roman Empire, the ſtrength and dignity thereof, to which ſo great a part of the world was ſubjected, and which it made uſe of to maintain the Idol-worſhip againſt Chriſtianity. And ſo the throne of the beaſt is expounded in the next words by βασιλεία, the kingdom, or Empire of Rome. Now that which is here ſaid to befal the Empire by the pouring out of the fifth vial, is that it was ἐσκοτωμένη, darkned, that is, loſt much of its ſplendor which before it enjoyed, which belongs clearly to the incurſions of the Barbarians, Perſians, Goths, Almans, &c. about theſe times which are here deſcribed, as every where appears in ſtory. As for the πόνος, pain, that here follows, it is the great grief and anxiety that it coſt them to contend and ſecure themſelves from theſe Barbarians, who being ſo contemptible in the eyes of the Romans, it was matter of great indignation to them to be thus infeſted by them, as Ægypt by flies and lice. And whereas, v. 11. ἕλκη boils, are joined with πόνοι pains, I ſuppoſe thoſe boils may again refer to that plague of Egypt, (as the darkning of the Kingdom plainly doth) and denote the effects of the Barbarians incurſions: as the boils, Exod. 9. 9. were produced by ſcattering aſhes of the furnace toward heaven, to which the inrodes of thoſe Barbarians in reſpect of their multitudes might fitly be reſembled. And then their blaſpheming of the God of heaven, is their railing at Chriſt and Chriſtianity, as that which in the heathens opinion brought all theſe evils upon them. e. Εὐφράτης — V. 12. Euphrates] That it is agreeable to the calling of Rome Babylon (ſee Note on c. 18. a.) to ſet Euphrates, the River that belongs to Babylon, to ſignify Tyber that belongs to Rome, hath been formerly ſhew'd, c. 9. Note e. And that it ſo ſignifies here, there is little doubt. From hence it follows, that the drying up of Euphrates, being an alluſion to the hiſtory of Cyprus, prophetically ſet down, Jer. 50. 38. and drought is upon her waters, and they ſhall be dried up, and c. 51. where is mention of the drying up her ſea, and making her ſprings dry, v. 36. it muſt in reaſon be interpreted thereby. There in the taking of Babylon, Cyrus turned away the River Euphrates, and entred the city thro' the channel thereof. (See Oroſius, l. 11. c. 6.) And ſo the drying of the River being the preparative to the taking the city, and the making that weak and acceſſible which otherwiſe was impregnable, this phraſe of drying up the water of Euphrates, is thought commodious to be made uſe of, to expreſs the weakning of the ſtrength of Rome, and making it conquerable, or, as it here follows, that the way of the kings—— might be prepared. To prepare a way we know is to remove difficulties and obſtructions, to level and plain a paſſage, and that in the prophets expreſs'd by exalting valleys, and bringing hills low, and plaining the rough places. And when rivers or waters are in the way, then the drying them up, is preparing the way, making them paſſable. And ſo the fitring the city of Rome for Conqueſt by Conſtantine and his ſons, (who are here called Kings from the riſing of the ſun, ſee note f.) is the full interpretation of drying up Euphrates, that the way of the Kings might be prepared. Of this the hiſtory is clear in Euſebius, Eccl. hiſt. l. 9. c. 9. (and ſo in Zoſimus alſo) that Maxentius having faſtned himſelf in Rome, (out of which he went not himſelf, having no confidence in the love and fidelity of the people) be fortified every place, and region, and city with armies for guards, and had a thouſand troops of ſoldiers to lye in ambuſh in every part of Italy, and the reſt of his dominions where the enemy was likely to come: Theſe ſure were the obſtructions, or difficulties, in Conſtantine's way to Rome, which are here to be dryed up, or removed; and accordingly it follows in the hiſtory, that Conſtantine being aſſiſted by God, ſet upon his firſt, ſecond, and third army, and overcame them all; and poſſeſſing himſelf of the greateſt part of Italy, came cloſe up to Rome. And ſo 'tis viſible what this drying up the River, by which their way was prepared, ſignifies, the ſubduing thoſe armies in Italy, ſo that now nothing withheld his paſſage from Rome; which is here looked on as a very great thing, proportionable to Cyrus's turning the river Euphrates, and entring Babylon thro' the channel of it. But there was yet one difficulty more to be conquer'd, before Conſtantine could enter Rome. For his only deſign being to deliver the Romans from the tyranny of Maxentius, and not to do any hurt, but rather bring relief to the inhabitants of the city, there was now no way to reconcile this difficulty, whilſt Maxentius remained fortified in the city. And therefore in God's wonderful providence it was ſo diſpoſed, that Maxentius and all his party came out of Rome, but inſtead of joining battel with Conſtantine, fled from him immediately; and having formerly built a treacherous bridge over Tyber, on deſign to draw Conſtantine's army over it, and ſo by the failing of the bridge to drown them, Maxentius himſelf and his forces are forced that way, and drowned in the pit which they had prepared for others, and himſelf, and his Life-guard were the firſt that thus periſhed. This ſo ſignal a deſtruction Euſebius thinks fit to compare to the Iſraelites victory over Pharaoh in the Red-ſea, and ſaith it was according to the prediction of the divine oracles, in all probability referring to this viſion here. The concluſion of it was, that this being done, Conſtantine came Conqueror to Rome, where without any oppoſition he was received by young and old, Senators and Nobles, and all the people of Rome, with cheerful countenances and joyous acclamations, as the preſerver and benefactor of them all; and commanding the ſign of the croſs to be ſet on the right hand of his ſtatue, he affix'd theſe words in Latin, Hoc ſalutari ſigno, veraci fortitudinis indicio, civitatem noſtram jugo Tyranni ereptam liberavi & S. P. Q. R. liberatum priſco ſplendori & claritati reſtituti, By this ſalvifick ſign, the true expreſſion of fortitude, I have freed our city, and delivered it from the Tyrants yoke, and have reſtored the Senate and People of Rome to their ancient ſplendor and brightneſs. And in like manner the Senate dedicated to him a triumphal arch, Liberatori urbis, fundatori quietis, To the deliverer of the city, and founder of their peace, as may be ſeen in Euſebius, Socrates, and Sozomen, and others. And ſo this was a farther completion of this Prophecy, and a laſt part of the drying up Euphrates, (parallel to that of the drying up of the Red-Sea before the Iſraelites) and preparing Conſtantine's peaceable Entrance into the city.

Sun, Mat. 2. 1. And agreeably to that, Conſtantine and his ſons, which had given up their names to the Chriſtian faith, and were promoters of it whilſt Maxentius perſecuted it, may be thus in prophetick ſtyle fitly deſcribed by the Kings from the riſing of the Sun. 2ly, Chriſt himſelf is called Ἀνατολὴ the riſing Sun, (ſee Note on Luke 1. 5.) and ſo ſeems to be called here, c. 7. 2. where the Angel aſcending from the Eaſt is one ſent immediately by Chriſt; and then βασιλεῖς ἀπ' ἀνατολῶν, Kings from the riſing of the Sun, may be a very fit phraſe to expreſs Chriſtian Kings. And it is to be obſerved, that Βασιλεῖς Kings, in this Book, is not confined to the Emperors or ſupreme Governors, but is more looſely uſed for Commanders, all in authority (ſee Note g. and c. 11. Note f.) and ſo may in the Plural be appliable to Conſtantine and his ſons, and the Chriſtian Commanders under him.

Βασιλεῖς ἀπ' ἀνατολῶν

g. Πνεύματα ἀκάθαρτα

V. 13. Unclean Spirits] What is here meant by πνεύματα ἀκάθαρτα unclean ſpirits, may in part be reſolved by Euſebius in the ſtory of Maxentius, Eccl. hiſt. l. 9. c. 9. where the firſt thing that he ſaith of him, is, that he relied on magical arts in this whole matter, and thereupon kept himſelf up cloſe in Rome, and would not go out of it. So again De vita conſtant. l. 1. c. 30. At laſt he fell to Magick and Sorcery; ſometimes cut up women great with child, ſometimes ript up the bowels of tender infants, ſometimes killed lions, all to divine thereby: He often uſed wicked adjurations to raiſe up Devils, ſaith he, by whoſe help he might avert the violence of the war from him, hoping that they would help him to the victory. Now theſe impure Spirits are here ſaid to be three, but the King's MS. wants that word τρία three. If we read it without three, then it is already explained, that he made uſe of Magick and Augury. But if the word three be retained, then either may it ſignify that he betook himſelf wholly to theſe arts, (the number of three, as of ſeven, having oft no other importance in it, but to ſignify a great deal) or elſe peculiarly theſe three ſorts; firſt, Augury, or divination by entrails; ſecondly, Calling up of devils (both particularly mentioned by Euſebius) and thirdly, the uſe of the Sibylline Oracles, which the Roman Sorcerers and Diviners generally dealt in, and Maxentius made uſe of; ſee Zoſimus, l. 2. Of theſe it is farther ſaid, that they were ὡς βάτραχοι as frogs, referring to thoſe creatures brought forth upon Egypt by the Magicians at Pharaoh's command, Exod. 8. 7. Of which, as it is known that they are impure creatures, breeding and dwelling in the mire, and ſo theſe impure ſpirits or arts are fitly compared to them; ſo it is alſo obſervable, how uſeleſs and unprofitable they are, they croak, but do nothing elſe, and ſo they fitly reſemble theſe Magical arts, which made a great noiſe, but never brought him the leaſt advantage, but rather haſtned his ruine, by relying on them. Then theſe frogs are ſaid to come out of the mouth of the Dragon, and the beaſt, and the falſe prophet: which again, if the word three be not retained, will conclude theſe Magical arts, which he made uſe of, to proceed promiſcuouſly from theſe three; but if the word τρία three be retained, then it will be proper to confine the reſponſes of the devils, when they were raiſed by him, to the firſt of the three, thoſe that came out of the mouth of the Dragon, for that is every where the Devils title in this book (ſee Note on c. 12. d. & 13. b.) and the devils being (as was ſaid) raiſed by Maxentius to direct and aſſiſt him, the firſt of theſe frogs is ſaid to have come out of the devils mouth immediately. Secondly, the art of divining by entrails, and to that purpoſe killing of women and children as well as beaſts, being directly a piece of Heatheniſm, confined to their Augurs and Prieſts; the ſecond of theſe frogs is ſaid to have come out of the mouth of the beaſt, that is, Idol-worſhip, ſo called, c. 13. 1. the Prieſts being the mouth thereof. Thirdly, the heathen Prophets undertaking to fetch grounds of their predictions moſt frequently from the Books of the Sibyls, ſuch fragments thereof as were remaining among them; the third frog is ſaid to come out of the mouth of the falſe prophet, that is, of the Colledge of diviners, which thus by ſtudy in thoſe Oracles undertook to foretel things to come. And of all theſe it is ſaid, that they did ſigns, either by foretelling ſometimes things that came to paſs, which gave them authority among men, or elſe by ſhewing ſome deceitful wonders: and that they went out, ἐπὶ upon, or to, the Kings of the whole world, that is, to Maxentius the Emperor, and his Commanders under him, call'd Βασιλεῖς, Kings in the Plural, (ſee Note f.) and incited them to the war of the great day of God, that is, to fight with Conſtantine, that inſtrument of Gods to bring in Chriſtianity into the Empire.

V. 16. Armageddon] What Armageddon, which is here ſaid to be an Hebrew word, ſignifies, or of what compoſition it is, is a matter of ſome queſtion. The Learned H. Grotius conceives it to be הר מגדון the mount of meeting, to note the place and battel where the armies met, viz. on Conſtantine's ſide 90000 foot, and 8000 horſe, of Germans, Gauls, and Britanes, on Maxentius's ſide 170000 foot, and 18000 horſe, of Romans, Italians, &c. in Zoſimus: and that this is here ſaid in reference not to the valley of Megiddo, where Joſias was ſlain, but to the waters of Megiddo, Judges 5. 9. where the Canaanites were ſlain by Barac; which appears the more probable, becauſe the Hebrew הר is in Greek rendred Ἀγ, as Ἀγγαΐζειν in Euſebius Præp. for הר גריזין mount Gerizin. But another compoſition of the word may be yet more probable, viz. that of Druſius, that it be made up of חרמא and גדדון, the exciſion or deſtruction of their armies, as גד in Hebrew, or their fortunes (all their former good ſucceſſes) as גד in Chaldee ſignifies. And ſo the clear meaning of the verſe is this, that the evil ſpirits, v. 14. the Magicians and Augurs, &c. gathered them together (ſo 'tis ſaid, v. 14. ϛωαγαγεῖν αὐτὰς, and to them in the Plural neuter belongs the ϛωάγαγεν in the Singular) cauſed them to fight this great battel with Conſtantine, which was the utter deſtruction of that great army of the heathens, and ſo a very heavy judgment or exciſion, the effect of the Vial of the ſixth Angel. This victory of Conſtantine over Maxentius was ſo ſignal and conſiderable, that, as Onufrius tells us, Faſt. l. 2. the Indictions (that known way of computing of times among the Romans) were taken from thence: ab eaque die primam Indictionem inchoari, ſaith Baronius, and from that day the firſt indiction began; ut liberatum à Maxentii tyrannide urbem & Eccleſiam indicaret, that it might proclaim and commemorate the freeing of the City and Church from Maxentius's tyranny. By which it may appear, how memorable a paſſage this was, and how fit to be the matter of this Viſion. See Abr. Buchholcers Chronology, Anno Chr. 312.

V. 17. It is done] It is uſual in Prophecies to ſet down the ſad events moſt covertly. Thus Scaliger* obſerves, Augures ſedentes in templo abſtinebant vocibus malè ominatis, idióque Alteram avem potiùs quàm Averſam dicebant; the Augurs, ſitting in the Temple, abſtained from the ſadder expreſſions, and therefore when they meant to ſignify any ill aboad, they called it not the Averſe but the other Augury. Paraphraſe.

CHAP. XVII.

1. And another viſion I ſaw to the ſame purpoſe. One of thoſe executioners of God's wrath came unto me, ſaying, I will ſhew thee the vengeance that is ready to befal the Imperial dignity of Rome, fitly entitled the great whore, (great in it ſelf, and whore for their impieties againſt God, their worſhip of many heathen gods, directly owning that title, as an harlot is ſhe that takes in many others inſtead of the one husband) ſitting, that is, ruling, over many waters, that is, much people, having many nations under her dominion.

1 AND there came one of the ſeven Angels which had the ſeven vials, and talked with me, ſaying unto me, Come hither, I will ſhew unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that ſitteth upon many waters,]

2. From the power and authority whereof many other kingdoms (ſee c. 13. 14.) have been confirmed and fortified in their idolatrous courſes, and had their falſe worſhip propagated to them, the whole Roman Empire running mad after her vile heathen practiſes.

2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.]

3. And in this viſion methought I was in a deſart (fit to repreſent the deſolation that was to be expreſs'd in that viſion) and there I ſaw what he had promiſed me, v. 1. a woman, that great whore mentioned there, the Imperial power of Rome heathen, ſeated on an Emperor in a ſcarlet robe, a great blaſphemer againſt the true God, and advancer of Idolatry, and he had ſeven heads, (the city of Rome built on ſeven-hills) and ten horns, that is, ſo many other Kings that ruled over divers countries, and were confederate with the Roman Emperor.

a. b.

3. So he carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderneſs: and I ſaw a woman ſit upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt, full of names of blaſphemy, having ſeven heads and ten horns]

4. And this Roman power was in great proſperity, much ſumptuouſneſs was beſtowed upon their Idol-worſhip, and all manner of abominable filthineſs was committed therein.

4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and ſcarlet colour, and * decked with gold, and precious ſtone, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthineſs of her fornication.]

* embroidered, κεχρυσωμένη

5. Which being ſo frequent and acknowledged in their ſecret devotions, are beſt deſcried by the word Myſtery, which was the word which the Greeks uſed for their uncleaneſt meetings, and by Babylon (ſee note on ch. 14. c. and ch. 18. a.) which of old was famous for theſe, and ſo deſtroyed. From hence came all the Idolatry of the other cities, ſee v. 2.

5. And upon her forehead was a name written, c Myſtery, Babylon the great, the mother of † harlots, and abominations of the earth.]

† or whoredoms, πορνεῶν, ſo Arethas and the ancient Latin

6. And beſide her Idolatries and uncleanneſs, ſhe was repreſented as a great perſecutor of Chriſtians, (ſee c. 1. d.) At this ſight of a woman thus repreſented, in all glory, and then drunk with blood, and vomiting it out, I was much aſtoniſhed.

6. And I ſaw the woman drunken with the blood of the Saints, and with the blood of the Martyrs of Jeſus: and when I ſaw her, I wondred with great admiration.]

7. And the Angel that ſhewed it me, v. 1. told me the interpretation of it, viz. that it was deſigned by God to repreſent the Roman heathen power, the ſeven hills on which it was built, and the ten Kings confederate with it.

7. And the Angel ſaid unto me, Wherefore didſt thou marvel? I will tell thee the myſtery of the woman, and of the beaſt that carrieth her, which hath the ſeven heads and ten horns.]

8. And the ſcarlet beaſt, v. 3. on whom this power is ſeated, & which blaſphemeth and defieth the God of heaven, that is, the perſon of the Emperor, in whom this power is veſted, at the time to which this part of the viſion refers, (ſee note a.) is one which was in power, but at this point of time, that is, after Veſpaſian's return out of Judea, was out of it, but ſhall come to it again, ſent, as it were, out of hell, to perſecute the Chriſtians. And when he, that is Domitian, ſhall have delivered up the Empire again to Veſpaſian, upon his Return out of Judea, and for ſome years become a private man again; this ſhall be matter of great admiration and aſtoniſhment to all that are not Chriſtians, whereſoever they are, ſeeing by this means that the perſecutor of Chriſtians is gone out of power (and when he comes in again, ſhall not continue long, but himſelf be cruelly butchered, v. 8. and 11.) and Veſpaſian, a favourer of the Chriſtians, but deſtroyer of the Jews, is come in again, even while Domitian was alive, which made it the more ſtrange.

8. The beaſt that thou ſaweſt, was, and is not, and ſhall aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth ſhall wonder, (whoſe names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world) when they behold the beaſt d which was, and is not, * and yet is.]

* altho' it be, καίπερ ὤν

9. This is the meaning of the riddle; the ſeven heads are the ſeven hills, which are ſo famouſly known in Rome.

9. And here is the † mind which hath wiſdom; The ſeven heads are ſeven mountains, on which the woman ſitteth.]

† ſenſe νοῦς

10. And beſide they denote the ſeven kings or emperors thereof, (that have had any thing to do with the Chriſtians) which are here to be numbred from the time of the beginning of theſe viſions, till this of the writing of them: Of them five are dead, all of violent deaths, poiſoned, or killed by themſelves or others, viz. Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, one then reigned, viz. Veſpaſian, and a ſeventh was not yet come to the kingdom, viz. Titus, who when he ſhould come to it, ſhould reign but two years and two months.

10. And * there are ſeven kings, five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he muſt continue a ſhort ſpace.]

11. And Domitian, deſcribed, v. 8. as he that was, and is not, that is, one that in Veſpaſians time, while he was buſy in other parts, exerciſed all power at Rome, and was called Emperor, is the eight, that is, comes to the Empire after thoſe ſeven, being the ſon of one of them, to wit, of Veſpaſian (in whoſe time alſo he held the government of Rome) and this a wretched accurſed perſon, a cruel bloody perſecutor of the Chriſtians, and ſhall be puniſh'd accordingly.

11. And the beaſt that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the ſeven, and goeth into perdition.]

12. As for the ten kings of the barbarous nations, noted by the ten horns, v. 3: thoſe which, (tho' after v. 16. they ſhared the Roman Empire, yet) as yet had not done ſo, had no Kingdom as yet within the Roman Territory, they for a ſmall time complied with the Roman power.

12. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power as kings one hour with the beaſt.]

13. And did as the Emperor did, perſecuted the Chriſtians in their Territories.

13. Theſe have one mind, and ſhall give their ſtrength and power unto the beaſt.]

14. And having done ſo, they ſhall e're long be ſubdued to the Chriſtian faith, according to God's promiſe that Chriſt ſhould be King of kings, that is, that Kings and Potentates ſhould be ſubdued unto him, and (according to the reaſonableneſs of it) that the Chriſtian faith conſiſting of nothing but patience and perſeverance under perſecutions, without any reſiſting, or rebelling againſt the perſecutors, ſhould at length approve it ſelf to Kings and Potentates, and prevail upon them to embrace the faith of Chriſt.

14. Theſe ſhall make e war with the Lamb, and the Lamb ſhall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings, and they that are with him are called and choſen, and faithful.]

15, 16. And he ſaith unto me, the waters, that is, the people of ſeveral nations, that were under the Roman Emperor ſo lately, and the ten Kings of thoſe nations that had no power or kingdom within the Roman Territories, v. 12. ſhall invade the Roman Empire, and at length ſpoil the city of all the bravery, and deprive them of many of their former dominions, and ſet the city (a third part of it, c. 16. 19.) on fire, (ſee Procop. Vand. l. 1.)

15. And he ſaith unto me, The waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt upon the beaſt, theſe ſhall hate the whore, and ſhall f make her deſolate and naked, and ſhall eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire.]

17. For g God shall put in their hearts † to fulfil his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.]

17. And all this an eminent act of Gods providence both that all those nations should first confederate with the Romans, and also that they should now break off, and execute Gods vengeance upon them. g.

Annotations on Chap. XVII.

a. Κόκκινον θηρίον

V. 3. A woman sit upon a scarlet——] That the beast here must signify the Idolatrous heathen worship, may be thought, by comparing this verse with c. 13. 1. There the beast, whereby that is acknowledged to be represented, is said to have seven heads, and ten horns, and upon the heads the name of blasphemy; and so here, much to the same purpose, the beast is full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads, and ten horns. But it must be observed first, that there are more beasts then one mentioned in these Visions, and not all signifying the same, but visibly divers things, and that difference observable from other circumstances. As first, here is the addition of κόκκινον scarlet coloured, which refers to the colour of the Imperial robe, which was such, saith Pliny, Nat. hist. l. 22. 2. And so that inclines it to signify the Emperor in this place: and tho' θηρίον, a beast, may seem a mean title to represent so great a person, yet when it is considered, that rage and cruelty, and all manner of uncleanness, may be found in an heathen Idolatrous Emperor, all these being so fit to be represented by a θηρίον, or wild beast, such an Emperor as this may well own that Title. And so when Julian introduceth C. Caligula, it is in this style, μεταστρέφει θηρίον πονηρὸν, an evil beast succeeds, in his Satyr against the Cesars; and in like manner of Vindex, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, ταῦτα τὰ θηρία, these beasts; and of Domitian, with a peculiar Epithet, to denote his cruelty (such as was Proverbially observed in Phalaris) τὸ Σικελικὸν θηρίον, the Scicilian beast, and again, φονικὸν θηρίον, the bloody beast, exactly parallel to the scarlet-coloured beast in this place. Secondly, here is a woman sitting upon that beast, which makes it differ again from that representation, c. 13. And this woman appears to be the whore in the first verse of this chapter: for being there told by the Angel, that he shall see the judgment of the great whore, it follows immediately, he carried me, and I saw a woman, &c. Now that this woman, or great whore, is the Imperial power of heathen Rome, appears by her sitting upon many waters, sitting there noting rule and dominion (as the many waters is great multitudes of people) and so by the Kings of the earth committing fornication with her, v. 2. Agreeable to which it is, that the beast whereon she sits should be the person of the Emperor, in whom that power was vested, or seated, as we say; which is farther expres'd, v. 7. by the beasts carrying the woman, the Greek word βαστάζειν there being that which belongs to carrying of burthens, &c. on shoulders, and that, we know, is figuratively applied to power or government, Isa. 9. 6. the government shall be upon his shoulders. And so likewise by v. 18. it is evident, that the woman is that great imperial city which reigneth over the kings of the earth. As for the ὀνόματα βλασφημίας, the names of blasphemy, they are most signally appliable to Domitian, who called himself Lord God (see c. 13. Note c.) and opposed the true God, and set up many false idol-gods in defiance of him, which is the most real blasphemy, and is so styled by the Author of the book of Maccabees. And to conclude, that this beast here is a person, and an Emperor, (and not the heathen worship, c. 13. 1.) it is evident by v. 11. where, of the Kings mentioned v. 10. this beast is said to be the eighth; and by the addition of he that was, and is not, it is as clear, that it was Domitian at the time when he had delivered up the Empire to his Father Vespasian at his return from Judea, being shortly to return to it again. Which with the rest of the description of him, v. 8. is appliable to no other but to him: see Note d.

Ib. Ten horns] That these ten horns, or Kings, were those barbarous nations that lay on the north of the Euxin sea, and of Danubius, and the Rhine (which were the ordinary bounds of the Roman Empire on that side) the number of them will sufficiently evince. Procopius reckons them up to that number of ten, Ostrogothi, Wisigothi, Vandali, Gepidæ, Longobardi, Heruli, Burgundions, Huns, Franks, Saxons. Of these it is said, v. 12. that they were ten kings, οἵτινες βασιλείαν οὔπω ἔλαβον, which had not yet received the kingdom. This cannot be understood, that they had as yet (in that point of time to which the Vision belonged) no dominions of their own, for they are called δέκα βασιλεῖς, ten Kings, and it is evident in story, that those barbarous Nations had their several Kings in that time. The meaning then must be, that they had as yet no dominion within the Roman Territory (but only made sudden incursions into it) their receiving the kingdom being when they shar'd the Empire among them. So the Fathers in the time of persecution interpreted it, Romani Imperii abscessio in decem reges dispersa, saith Tertullian, The departure of the Roman Empire dispersed into ten kings: & decem regibus, in quos dividetur quod nunc regnat imperium, saith Irenæus, The ten Kings into which the Empire, which now reigns, shall be divided. And then, before they came to this having a kingdom, dominion in the Roman Territories, it is said of them, that as kings they receive power with the beast, that is, join and comply, and act with the beast, assist heathen Rome in persecuting the Christians (but that only μιαν ὥραν, one hour, a small short while) which is farther expres'd by having one mind, and giving their strength and power to the beast. What point of time it was when this was done, being but μίαν ὥραν for a short space, is the only matter of difficulty. And here first, it is clear, that this time here pointed to is before they took kingdoms within the Roman Territory, both by the βασιλείαν οὔπω, they had not yet received the kingdom; and because when they did so, they did make desolate, and eat her flesh, v. 16. and therefore the vulgar Latines reading, post bestiam, after the beast (as if it were μετὰ θηρίον, not μετὰ θηρίου) must needs be an error. 2. It must be before the Emperors became Christian; for θηρίον the beast signifying the Roman Idolatry, not simply, but having power and persecuting Christians, their giving that power to the beast supposes it to be while it is the beast, that is, heathen and persecuting. 3. It must be before these barbarous nations had received the faith, for after, they would not join with the beast, and that is an argument again, that it was before they got possession of any piece of the Roman dominion: for it is manifest in story, that a great part of these nations were Christians, tho' Arians, before that. For the first of them that came on the South of Ister, (which is Danubius, when it toucheth upon Illyricum) were those who in the time of Valens obtained of him to come into Thracia, and to dwell on that side of Ister, and to defend that limit of the Empire against the other Goths that were Pagans; see Theodor. l. 4. c. ult. Sozom. l. 6. c. 3, 7. Paulus Diaconus hist. Miscel. l. 12. c. 14. and Ammian Marcel. And from these Arian Goths swarmed afterwards those which invaded Italy, Africk, Spain. As for the short incursions which the Goths made into Asia, or the Franks into Gallia, in the time of Gallienus and of Claudius, wherein the Christians suffered much by them, (and the space would fit μίαν ὥραν well) that cannot be it neither, because then they did not give their strength and power to the beaſt. Fourthly, then that which is the moſt probable is this, That the Chriſtian religion was propagated among thoſe barbarous people, and was not publickly perſecuted by them, whiles the Roman Emperors from time to time did moſt bloodily purſue it. That it was ſpead among them, that one place in Tertullian adv. Jud. c. 8. may ſuffice. Et Britannorum inacceſſa loca Romanis, Chriſto verò ſubdita, & Sarmatarum, & Dacorum, & Germanorum, & Scytharum, & abditarum multarum Gentium, &c. The places which the Romans had not come to were ſubdued to Chriſt, the Britains, the Sarmatians, the Dacians, the Scythians, the Germans, and many ſecret Nations. Which words do plainly point at thoſe very nations which afterwards overrrun the Empire. And there are not related any perſecutions in thoſe parts, which would not have been altogether omitted in Eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, if there had been any publick authoritative perſecution there. And it is obſervable here in England, from the days of King Lucius until the reign of Diocleſian (when Alban the Proto-Martyr of England ſuffered) the Chriſtians continued in peace and quietneſs. See Bede Eccl. hiſt. l. 1. c. 4. Hereupon it may be collected that Diocleſian being a violent and furious perſecuter, that extended his perſecutions to all parts of his Empire, at leaſt in the two laſt years of his reign, a vigorous and active Prince, that enlarged the limits of the Empire, particularly to thoſe Northern parts, Dacià reſtitutà porrectis uſque ad Danubii caput Germaniæ Rhetiæque limitibus, having recovered Dacia, and reach'd out the limits of Germany and Rhetia as far as the head of Danubius, as it is ſaid of him in the Panegyrick ad Diocleſ. & Maximian. (and more particularly Pomponius Lætus in that ſhort hiſtory which he gives of Diocleſian, ſpeaks to the very point of time, Diocletianus, rebus toto Oriente compoſitis, Europam repetiit, ubi jam Scythæ, Sarmatæ, Alani & Baſternæ jugum ſubiverant, unà cum Carpis, Cattis & Quadis, &c. Diocleſian having compoſed affairs over all the Eaſt, returned to Europe, where the Scythians, Sarmatians, Alans and Baſternians, together with the Carpi, Catti and Quadi and others had already undergone, and ſubmitted to his yoke; ſo that at the time whe he triumphed for the Perſian victory, theſe Northern people were brought under ſome yoke, which was in the eighteenth year of his Empire. See Euſeb. in Chronic. and then in the ſame year he and Maximian contrived and decreed the general perſecution over the whole Empire, which before that time was but in ſome parts. See Euſeb. l. 8. c. 1. & 9.) From theſe conſiderations, I ſay, it may be collected, that this was a time in which the Pagan bordering Princes might be ſtirred up in compliance with ſuch Emperors, to perſecute poor Chriſtians within their Territories, and yet that perſecution laſt but a very ſhort time; partly, becauſe the condition of that ſort of people is to be reſtleſs, and always attempting ſomewhat upon their neighbours that did thus awe them, being impatient of any yoke; and partly, becauſe Diocleſian reſigned the Empire about two years after. That we cannot attain unto a full knowledge of the proceedings of that time, the reaſon of Baronius is good, becauſe no writer of that time (who did ſet down by way of hiſtory the actions of Diocleſian) is extant, the work of Claudius Euſthenius his Secretary, who did write the actions of him and his three colleagues, being periſhed. In this obſcurity of the time we can but gueſs, but this conjecture is probable, and ſuits well with μίαν ὥραν the ſhort ſpace, and all other circumſtances of the context.

C. Μυστήριον

V. 5. Myſtery] The word μυστήριον ſignifies a ſecrecy. It is alſo an unclean word, ſet by Achilles Tatius to ſignify the nakedneſs of a woman. Among the Gentiles it was uſed to denote their ſecreteſt Idol-worſhips, their τελεταὶ and ἐποπτεῖαι which being for the moſt part very unclean and abominable, as in their Eleuſinia ſacra, &c. They were generally ſtyled μυστήρια and divided into μεγάλα and μικρά, their greater and leſſer myſteries. Theſe, ſaith Tertullian, the Gnoſticks imitated, and had in their worſhips curtains drawn, and ſilence ſtrictly kept to vail and keep ſecret what they did. Hence is it, that this word is here thought fit to expreſs the Idolatry and heathen-worſhip of this city, which had generally this of uncleanneſs joined with it.

d. Ὁ ἦν ὅτι, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι καίτοι ὤν

V. 8. Which was, and is not] That Domitian had and exerciſed all power at Rome in his Father Veſpatian's time whilſt he was employed abroad in Syria, &c. appears by Tacitus, who ſaith of him diſtinctly, Domitianum Cæſarem conſalutatum, &c. that Domitian was ſaluted by the name of Cæſar, Hiſt. l. 3. in fine, and nomen ſedemque Cæſaris Domitianus acceperat, Domitian had received the name and throne of Cæſar, l. 4. in initio, and by all other writers of thoſe times. At the return of Veſpaſian he was deveſted of his power; and ſo tho' he had been Emperor, and ſtill continued alive at that point of time to which this part of the Viſion refers, yet 'tis true of him, οὐκ ἔστι, he is not: by which it may be gueſt at what time theſe Viſions were written, at leaſt to what time this Viſion refers, viz. to the time of Veſpaſian after his return out of Syria, the war being left unto Titus. And this diſtinctly appears v. 10. by the enumeration of the eight Emperors there, of which Claudius being the firſt, Nero ſecond, Galba third, Otho fourth, Vitellius fifth, it is there ſaid, five are fallen, and one is, that is, is now alive at this point of the Viſion, viz. Veſpaſian and Titus, the ſeventh is not yet come, and after his ſhort reign, then v. 11. follows this ſucceſſor of his, Domitian, deſcribed, as here, by the title of, he which was, and is not, and is the eighth, (for ſo he was) and is ἐκ τῶν ἑπτά of, or from, the ſeven, that is, the ſon or off-ſpring of one of them, viz. of Veſpaſian. This perſon being a great perſecutor of Chriſtians, God's judgments were remarkably to fall upon him, which is the meaning of ὑπάγει εἰς ἀπώλειαν, he goeth to perdition, v. 11. for he was butcher'd by his own ſervants: and Apollonius Tyaneus the great Magician is ſaid to have cryed out at Epheſus many miles off, at the minute when he was kill'd, Strike the Tyrant, ſtrike the Tyrant, and to have told them, Believe it, the Emperor is kill'd this very moment, which the Devil, it ſeems, (whether from this and the like prophecies of God here, or by his ſpeedy conveyance of what he ſaw, I cannot affirm) by his familiarity with that Magician enabled him thus to declare.

Ἐκ τῶν ἑπτά

ὑπάγει εἰς ἀπώλειαν

e. πολεμήσουσι μετὰ τοῦ ἀρνίου

V. 14. War with the Lamb] Warring with the Lamb, ſignifies oppoſing and perſecuting Chriſtianity; not as if there were ſet battels between them and Chriſtians, but ſuch as are ſuppoſeable againſt thoſe whoſe principle was to ſuffer, not to reſiſt the perſecuting Emperors (under whom they were:) For this is the condition of the Lamb here to endure, to be ſlaughter'd but not to fight again. This is here ſaid of theſe ten Kings (confederate with the Romans) that they ſhould thus war, that is, be uſed as ſoldiers to execute the Romans bloodineſs upon Chriſtians: and this is true of the Goths and others, while they were confederate with heathen Rome; tho' ſoon after they themſelves came over to Chriſtianity (tho' moſt to Arianiſm) (Gothi per legatos ſupplices popoſcerunt, ut illis Epiſcopi, à quibus Chriſtianæ fidei regulam diſcerent, mitterentur. Valens Imperator Doctores Ariani dogmatis miſit. Gothi primæ fidei rudimentum, quod accepere, tenuerunt, The Goths deſired by their Embaſſadors that Biſhops might be ſent them, from whom they might learn the rule of faith. Valens the Emperor ſent them Arian doctors. The Goths retained thoſe rudiments which they firſt received, Oroſ. l. 7. c. 33.) no doubt much forwarded therein by ſeeing the patience and conſtancy of Chriſtian Martyrs, who have no other way to overcome their enemies, and ſo in that only reſpect are ſaid to conquer them here, that is, to bring them to Chriſtianity, and ſubject them to Chriſts kingdom. For of Alaricus 'tis clear that he was then a Chriſtian, and ſent Embaſſies to Honorius by Biſhops, (ſee Sozomen, l. 9. c. 8.) and that Attalus was baptized by Sigeſarius a Gothiſh Biſhop, and by that that was the dearer to Alaricus and all the Goths, c. 9. And that in reverence to S. Peter, Alaricus gave mercy to all those that fled to his Temple for Sanctuary, and restored all that was taken out of the Church (by a Gothish soldier, who astonish'd with the richness of the sight told Alaricus of it) and at the putting all in their places, sung an hymn to God, Barbarians and Romans together, saith Orosius, l. 7. c. 20. 39. and so 'tis clear of the greatest part of the army, of whom saith * Orosius, Christiani fuere qui parcerent, &c. they were Christians that spared, Christians who were spared, Christians for the memory of whom there was any such thing as sparing. To the manifestation of this pertains that passage set down by * Hieron. Rubeus, that Saul an Hebrew, or, as others affirm, a Pagan, who had the chief command under Stilico, designing to take advantage, and set upon the Goths when they were not prepared, did it upon Easter-day. And Alaricus discerning their approach, sent to desire he would defer the fight till the morrow, in respect of the religion of the day promising then to meet him. But Saul would not hearken to it, but set upon them unarmed, and holding up their hands and eyes in prayer to heaven for aid, in tam sancti mysterii celebratione, in the performance of the duties of the day, and so killed many of them; till Alaricus after the space of an hour, saying that they had now satisfied the religion of the day, and exhorting his soldiers to follow him stoutly, brake in upon them with a great army, and repulsed and put them to flight; and if Honorius and Stilico had not come to their relief, eo omnino die de Roma terrarum domina, quæ victori præmium erat futura, actum fuisset, Rome had been destroyed upon the Fate of that day.

f. Ἡμιμαιόλου ποιήσει πόρτιν.

V. 16. Make her desolate.] The Goths and Vandals over-running Italy and Rome it self, (Alaricus the Goth and Gensericus the Vandal Kings, and divers others, πολλῶν ἐπανισταμένων τυράννων, many Kings making insurrections, saith Sozomen) is famously known in story. See Socrat. l. 7. c. 10. Sozom. l. 9. c. 6. Of the spoils also that were made by them Historians are plentiful, especially Procopius. Of Alaricus and his, that they left nothing behind them, either of private or publick treasure, the Commander giving order to his soldiers, saith Sozomen l. 6. 9. ἐκέλευε τῶν Ῥωμαίων πλοῦτον ἁρπάζειν, to plunder all the wealth of the city, and ὡς ἂν δύναιτο πάσας τὰς οἰκίας λεηλατεῖσθαι, as near as was possible to spoil every house. Of Gensericus, that he brought by sea to Carthage a vast deal of gold and silver; and that he robb'd the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, or Olympius. So Socrates of Alaricus, that they took the city and rifled it, and τὰ πολλὰ τῶν θαυμαστῶν ἐκείνων διαμάτων κατέκαυσαν, burnt many of those admirable spectacles. So also that they conquer'd many Provinces of the Romans, and possess'd them as their own; as Dacia, Pannonia, Thrace, Illyricum, France, Spain, Africk, Italy and Dalmatia, which is here called the eating of the flesh of the whore. As for their burning of the city, (though that signifie not their burning it all down to the ground, but only πολλὰς τῆς πόλεως οἰκοδομὰς, many buildings of the city, and in Socrates, the many admirable spectacles there) that is known to be done by Totilas at the first entring the city, though Belisarius was a means that 'twas not all burnt down; see Procopius Goth. 4. and Sozomen l. 9. c. 6. This being done in the time of Honorius the Emperor, and Innocentius Bishop of Rome, and so in time of Christianity, may be thought not to belong to heathen Rome. But then 'tis observable, 1. that by the providence of God, not only Honorius himself was out of the city, but that Innocentius (after the first taking of it, before the second) was like Lot out of Sodom (saith Orosius l. 7. c. 39.) removed out of that city to Ravenna, where the Emperor was, on occasion of an Embassy mention'd by Sozomen l. 9. c. 7. and by Zozimus: 2*ly*, That there were at that time very many professors of Gentilism there, in the Senate, not only in the city, as may appear by that passage in Sozomen, that at the first siege, ἀναισχύντως ἐδίκας τοῖς Ἑλληνίζουσι τῆς συγκλήτου δύσεν ἐν τῷ Καπιτωλίῳ, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις ναοῖς, The Gentiles of the Senate, or those of the heathen profession there, thought it necessary to worship and sacrifice in the Capitol and other heathen Temples (which 'tis clear were then among them) some Thuscian Magi being sent for by Attalus the ὕπαρχος or Governor of the City, who promised by thunder and lightning to drive away the Barbarians. Continuò de repetendis sacris celebrandisque tractatur, Presently they entred into consultation about restoring their Gentile sacrifices, and offering them. Oros. l. 7. c. 38. And another passage there is in Sozomen c. 9. that upon the miscarriage of Attalus, (his losing that dignity of Emperor, of which he was so ambitious, that he would not be content to be a partner with Honorius) ἐδυσφόρουν Ἕλληνές τε, &c. the Gentile Idolaters that were in the City, and those of the Arian party, were extremely troubled; the Gentiles guessing by Attalus's inclination and former course, (being but now lately become Christian, since from being ὕπαρχος Governor of Rome, he was now joined with Alaricus, and christned by a Gothish Bishop) εἰς τὸ φανερὰς ἑλληνίζειν αὐτὸν ἠγῶνίσθαι did verily believe that he would professedly favour and set up Gentilism, καὶ τὰς πατρίους ἀποδιδόναι ναοὺς καὶ ἑορτὰς καὶ θυσίας, and restore the antient temples and feasts and sacrifices. And indeed 'tis clear by the passages of the story, that though the Heathens in Rome were the men that called Alaricus to their assistance, to take the patronage of them; yet by God's turning of things it fell out, that they beyond all others found the vengeance of his coming to light heavily upon them. Nay, 'tis Orosius's observation, that God permitted Alaricus to enter the city, that he might bring contumely and reproach upon the Idolaters or Heathens there, and give the triumph and victory to Christian religion over Gentilism, now conquer'd and laid prostrate; and that many Gentiles, or Pagans, astonish'd with what they saw thus brought to pass, quite contrary to their expectation, turned christians by this means, l. 7. c. 39. Thirdly, it was the common complaint of the Gentiles at that time, that the reception of Christianity had provoked the gods to send these vastations upon them, the direct contrary of which is at large shewed by Salvian De providentia, viz. that the Christians were the only preservers of the world: and indeed it is clear by the story, that had it not been for them, Rome had been quite destroyed; for, saith Sozomen, Alaricus when he took it, commanded his soldiers to rifle the city, &c. but αἰδοῖ τῇ πρὸς τὸν Ἀπόστολον Πέτρον, ἄσυλον εἶναι παρεσκεύαζε καὶ περὶ αὐτὸν σωτήριον ἐκκλησίαν, μεγάλην τε, καὶ πολλὴν χώραν περιέχουσαν, through reverence to S. Peter, he commanded that the Church built about his Tomb, which takes up a great circuit, and could hold a great multitude, should be a sanctuary to all that would make use of it: and so saith * Orosius, Gothi, relictâ intentione prædandi, ad confugia salutis (hoc est sanctorum locorum) agmina ignara cogentes, The Goths gave over their intention of rifling, and forced troops of Christians, not knowing what they did, to save themselves by flying to consecrated places. (And Isidore adds, that of those that were by the soldiers found out of the Churches, as many as named the name of Christ, or the Christian Saints, were constantly spared by the soldiers, and that thus many thousands did escape.) By this means the Christians were generally delivered and saved from the general destruction, (and also with them some Gentiles, saith S. Augustine De civ. Dei. l. 11. c. 1. which fled with the Christians to the monuments of the Martyrs, and the Basilicæ of the Apostles) and so were the σωζόμενοι or escapers here too, as before among the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem. And, as he saith, τοῦτο γέγονεν, &c. this was the cause that Rome was not quite destroyed, those that were saved there in that Sanctuary (διασωθέντες, saith he) being many, who afterward rebuilt the City, c. 9. And Sozomen c. 10. hath a famous story to this purpose of a young soldier, that having taken a very handsom Christian woman, and being by her constancy kept from defiling her, carried her to the Basilica that so she might be safe from all others, and kept pure for her own husband. And S. Jerome on the other ſide tells of ſome Chriſtians, which thinking by diſſembling or concealing their religion to ſave themſelves, were miſerably uſed, but at laſt being diſcerned to be Chriſtians, were releaſed and carried ſafe to the Baſilica. See Jerom. Ep. 16. ad Princep. & Ep. 8. in the former mentioning this of Marcella and Principia, in the latter of Proba, Juliana, and Demetrias. But then fourthly, (which is moſt to be conſidered) even the ſins of Rome Chriſtian at this time were ſo great, as moſt juſtly to bring theſe judgments upon them, thoſe Gentile ſins of all manner of unnatural villany being moſt frequent among them, which were with as much reaſon now to expect the fury of God's wrath to be poured out on ſuch vile impure Chriſtians, as before we found the judgments that fell on the impenitent Jews, to have lighted on the Gnoſtick Chriſtians of that people and that age To this purpoſe, 1. 'tis Sozomen's affirmation, that 'twas then the judgment of prudent men, that this that befel Rome, was from the wrath of God (ὑπὸ δικομηνίας τοῦ τα συμβαίνειν τοῖς Ῥωμαίοις καὶ ποινὴν ὧν αὐτὴ τὸ ὑπὸ πολλῆς ῥᾳθυμίας καὶ ἀκολασίας εἰς ἑαυτὰς καὶ ξένους ἐξήκουσι ἥμαρτον) as a puniſhment of what they had done upon themſelves and ſtrangers through ſloth and incontinence (which ſure refers to the ſins of Sodom, pride, pampering of the fleſh, pampering and idleneſs, and the effects of that, all unnatural luſts both on themſelves and ſtrangers, as the Sodomites on the Angels that came among them, and therefore Oroſius ſaid of Innocentius, (that he was reſcued as Lot out of Sodom) though the Tranſlator there make it to be but injuſtice and oppreſſion of the poor, miſtaking them for the ξένοι ſtrangers there. 2*ly*, 'Tis the joint affirmation of Socrates and Sozomen, that a Monk of Italy coming in haſte to Rome, to intercede, and perſwade Alaricus to ſpare the city, he anſwered him, ὡς οὐχ ἑκὼν ἐπιχειρεῖ, that he did not voluntarily ſet upon this enterpriſe (juſt as Titus profeſs'd of Jeruſalem) ἀλλά τις σωτηρὸς ἐπακλῶν αὐτὸν βιάζεται, καὶ ἐπιτάττει τ' Ῥώμην πορθεῖν, but that ſome body continually importuned and enforced him, commanding him that he ſhould deſtroy Rome, which at laſt he did. Theſe are the words in Sozomen, and in Socrates to the ſame ſenſe, οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐθελουσὶς τὰ ἐκεῖ πορεύομαι, ἀλλά τις καθ' ἑκάστην ἐγκεῖταί μοι, βασανίζων καὶ λέγων, ἄπιθι, τάχυνον Ῥωμαίων πόρθησον πόλιν, I go not a voluntier about this buſineſs, but ſome body is very troubleſome to me, tormenting me, and ſaying, Go, and deſtroy the city of Rome: which as it is the clearing of thoſe words here v. 17. God put into their hearts, &c. ſo it ſignifies the great ſins of this place, which thus brought God's judgments upon them. 3*ly*, 'Tis the plain acknowledgment of Salvian every where throughout his books De Providentia, that the impieties of Chriſtians were ſo great, and particularly thoſe abominable commiſſions and cuſtomary practices of all unnatural uncleanneſſes, (which have been conſtantly the deſtroying not only of the Canaanites, &c. but of the Jews and the Chriſtians) that it was God's will they ſhould thus be puniſhed by the Barbarians, who though they were very weak and ſlothful, not fit for war at all, in compariſon of the Romans, yet were, ſaith he, more chaſt and pure than they, and ſo were appointed by God to be ſcourges of them. See l. 7. And again, that the Barbarians being Chriſtians, though Arians, were much more tolerable than theſe, which though not all Arians, were many very abominable livers.

V. 17. God ſhall put in their hearts.] The ſtrangeneſs of this judgment on that city, and the immediate hand of God in it, will appear (beſide what hath been ſaid of ſome body moleſting, and forcing Alaricus to it Note i.) by theſe three things. 1. By the ſuddenneſs of the taking of it, ſo ſuddenly, that when word was brought to Honorius to Ravenna, that Rome was deſtroyed, he thought they had meant a cock called by that name Roma, as Proſper hath it in Chronico: and this is referred to in the viſion, c. 18. 10. For in one day thy judgment cometh, and v. 19. for in one hour ſhe is become deſolate. 2*ly*, That they made ſuch ſpeed in rifling it, that when one would think three years had been little enough to obey Alaricus's command, in ſearching out and taking away all the treaſure of the city, all * Hiſtorians agree, that they were but three days about it; only Marcellinus ſaith, that the ſixth day after Alaricus entred he went out again. 3*ly*, That Alaricus having thus taken, and rifled, and poſſeſs'd the city, ſhould neither ſtay in it and keep it, nor go on with his army againſt the Emperor, but abſolutely retire, ſo ſoon after ſo ſtrange a ſucceſs; as if God that had ſent him on this meſſage or ſervice on purpoſe, and never ſuffered him to be quiet till he had done it, as ſoon as the work was done for which he ſent him, had immediately recalled him, and not permitted him to go one ſtep farther, and ſo only uſed him as a means to deliver up the city to the Chriſtians, the Idolaters being generally deſtroyed out of it by this means, and the Chriſtians as generally preſerved.

Paraphraſe. CHAP. XVIII.

1. And another repreſentation I received of the deſolation that was to befal heathen Rome by Alaricus, &c. and of the conſequents of it. For methought I ſaw a mighty Angel come down from heaven in a moſt glorious manner, or with power to diſabuſe the world, and ſhew them what they ſaw not before; viz. how falſe it was that was ſaid of that city, that it was eternal.

1. AND after theſe things I ſaw * another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightned with his glory.]

* An Angel, Ἄγγελον.

2. And he cryed aloud, that all might hear, ſaying, That great heathen city, ſo like Babylon of old for greatneſs, populouſneſs, heatheniſm, luxury, oppreſſing the people of God, is now deſtroyed, faln from that eternity it dream'd of, and is now over-run with Barbarians, (ſo ſcorned before and hated by them) that is, Goths and Vandals, &c. as with Satyrs and Owls, Zim and Ohim, &c.

2. And he cried mightily with a ſtrong voice, ſaying, a Babylon the great is faln, is faln, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul ſpirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.]

3. And this is a moſt juſt puniſhment of her foul Idolatries, which ſhe hath infuſed into other Nations as far as her power extended, and of her great pride and luxury, the expences laid out on which were the enriching of the Merchants of other Nations, which brought in jewel to the feeding, materials to the ſupporting of it.

3. For all nations have drank of † the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the Kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich * through the abundance of her delicacies.]

4. And another voice, methought, I heard, warning all Chriſtians to come out of her, that is, firſt, to abſtain ſtrictly from all communicating with her ſins (contrary to what the looſer ſort of Chriſtians did;) and ſecondly, to depart out of the city (as the Emperor Honorius and the Biſhop Innocentius did to Ravenna, at the time of Alaricus's ſiege;) and thirdly to flie to the Baſilica or Chriſtian Church at the time of plundering or deſtroying Rome (as the Chriſtians did) as the only way of reſcuing them from the deſtruction.

4. And I heard another voice from heaven, ſaying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her ſins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.]

5. For the voice or cry of her ſins is come to heaven, and now the vengeance is come upon her.

5. For her ſins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembred her iniquities.]

6. Now ſhe ſhall be payed for all her provocations, and as ſhe hath meeted to others, (the Chriſtians perſecuted by her) ſo ſhall it be by the Goths, &c. meeted to her with advantage; ſhe hath mixed a poiſonous cup, a mixture of wine and myrrhe, in ſeducing ſome, and perſecuting others, and now ſhe ſhall have twice as much bitterneſs provided for her.

6. Reward her even as ſhe rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works; in the cup which ſhe hath † filled, fill to her double.]

(see note on ch. 17. e.) and all this a visible judgment of God upon her, in whose hands are all the creatures, ready press'd for his service, to execute his vengeance on his enemies.

Annotations on Chap. XVIII.

a. Βαβυλων.

V. 2. Babylon.] That the title of Babylon here is bestowed on Rome in the Vision of her destruction is resolved by S. Augustine De Civ. Dei l. 18. c. 2. Ipsa Babylonia quasi prima Roma, Roma quasi secunda Babylonia est, Babylon was as a first Rome, and Rome is as a second Babylon; and c. 22. Condita est Roma velut altera Babylon, & prioris filia Babylonis, Rome is built as another Babylon, and daughter of the former Babylon. And the ground of it may probably be this, because Babylon was the seat of the Assyrian Monar-chie, as Rome of the Roman, and the Aſſyrian Monarchy being the firſt, as the Roman the laſt (illud primum, hoc ultimum imperium, ſaith Oroſius, li. 7. c. 2.) Rome, that thus ſucceedeth Babylon, may well be called by that name. And ſo by Tertullian adver. Mar. l. 3. c. 13. Babylonia apud Joannem Romanæ urbis figura eſt, perinde magnæ & regno ſuperbæ, & ſanctorum Dei debellatricis, Babylon in S. John, is the figure of Rome, as being, like that, a great city, proud of its dominion, and a deſtroyer of the ſaints of God; and the ſame words are again repeated, l. 3. adv. Jud. So 1 Pet. 5. 13. the Συνεκλεκτὴ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι, the fellow choſen, or fellow Church in Babylon, the aſſembly of Chriſtians in that heathen city, is by the Scholiaſt affirmed to denote the Church of Rome, διὰ τὸ φαυλαντὸς, becauſe of the ſplendor of it, ſaith he. And ſo generally the ancients underſtood it, and Oroſius hath ſet down the parallel betwixt them in many particulars, l. 7. 2. And this being premiſed will be a key to the whole Chapter: for Babylon is the note of an heathen, unclean, abominable City, and ſo belongs only to ſo much of Rome as was then capable of that title, ſaith S. Jerome ad Algaſ. qu. 11. and, Cecidit Babylon magna: eſt quidem ibi Sancta eccleſia, tropæa Apoſtolorum & martyrum, eſt Chriſti vera confeſſio, eſt ab Apoſtolis prædicata fides, & Gentilitate calcatâ in ſublime ſe quotidie erigens vocabulum Chriſtianum, The prophane heathen Babylon is fallen, Babylon the great: in the place thereof is the holy Church, the monuments of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, the true faith of Chriſt, or profeſſion of Chriſtian Religion, that which was preached by the Apoſtles, and heatheniſm being trodden down, the Chriſtian name is daily advanced on high, Ep. 17. ad Marcellam: and not to the Chriſtian part of it, called by the other title by S. Peter, the Church in Babylon (and Babylon it ſelf never ſet to ſignifie the Church;) not to the Emperor Honorius, who was then a Chriſtian and at Ravenna ſafe at that time from the invaders; nor again to Innocentius the Biſhop, who was by the ordering of God's providence, betwixt the firſt and ſecond ſiege, reſcued (like Lot out of Sodom, or the Chriſtians out of Jeruſalem) out of the city to Ravenna alſo; nor generally to the Chriſtians, who were ſome of them, ſaith * Palladius, gone out a little before, being perſwaded by Melania to a Monaſtick life, and carried to Sicily firſt, and thence to Jeruſalem, where, ſaith he, ἔχαιρον μὴ συμπεραπούμενοι τοῖς ἀνηκεστάτοις κακοῖς τῆς προθέσεως, they rejoiced that they were not together involved in the miſerable evils of that vaſtation, δοξάζοντες τὸν Θεὸν ὅτι τῇ ἀρίστῃ μεταβολῇ τῶν πραγμάτων, glorifying God for the excellent change of affairs, καὶ τῇ παραδόξῳ αὐτῶν σωτηρίᾳ, and for their own wonderful deliverance; and the reſt which were left in the city, at laſt ſaved by flying to the Baſilicæ, and many carried thither by the very ſoldiers, that they might be ſafe (ſee note on c. 17. e.) who conſequently ſurvived to reſtore and re-edifie the city, a more Chriſtian City than it had been before: But to the heathen part of the city and that polluted profaner ſort of Chriſtians, who (as was ſaid Note on c. 17. e.) called this judgment (theſe enemies as their patrons) on the city, and by the admirable diſpoſition of God's over-ruling hand of Providence, were themſelves the only men that ſuffered under it. So that the ſum of this fall of Babylon is the deſtruction of the wicked and heathen, and preſerving of the pure and Chriſtian Rome, and ſo in effect the bringing that City and Empire to Chriſtianity. To this purpoſe, ſee S. Hierome adverſ. Jovinian. l. 2. Ad te loquar qui ſcriptam in fronte blaſphemiam Chriſti confeſſione deleſti, Urbs potens, urbs orbis Domina— Maledictionem quam tibi Salvator in Apocalypſi comminatus eſt, potes effugere per pœnitentiam, I will ſpeak to thee who haſt blotted out the blaſphemy written in thy forehead, by the confeſſion of Chriſt——— Thou potent City, thou City, Miſtreſs of the world——— Thou mayeſt avoid the curſe which Chriſt in the Apocalypſe hath threatned to thee, by repentance; adding, cave Joviniani nomen quod de Idolo derivatum eſt, beware of the name of Jovinian, which is derived from the Idol-god Jupiter: and this peculiarly in reſpect of thoſe remaining heathens and hereticks, which now at the time when S. Hierome wrote, not long before the coming of Alacrius, were at Rome, and at length ſet up their Idol-ſervice again in the time of the ſiege, and were ſignally deſtroyed at this taking of it. So again, S. Hierome in præfat. de Spiritu S. ſpeaking of Rome, Cùm in Babylone verſarer, & purpurata meretricis eſſem colonus, When I lived at Rome, and was an inhabitant of the purple whore. All noting this heathen Rome to be the ſubject of theſe prophecies. This being here ſet down obſcurely in prophetick ſtyle by way of Viſion, was but darkly underſtood before the coming of it, yet ſo far expected by Chriſtians, that the heathens did take notice of this their expectation, and looked upon them as men that had an evil eye upon that City and Empire, and mutter'd ruine to it. Thus in Lucian's Philopat. (or whoſe ſoever that Dialogue is, if it were not his) the Chriſtians, character'd (though not named) by the mention of the Trinity in the beginning of the Dialogue, and deſcribed by that ſcoffer as a ſottiſh fanatick people, are brought in (as at that time, when Trajan (under the title of ἀτοκράτωρ Emperor toward the end) was warring in the Eaſt againſt the Perſians) and ſet down as thoſe that wiſhed all ill to the city, that is, Rome, and conſequently to that Army in Aſia, by their diſcourſe of the news of the times, betraying their wiſhes and expectations that it might be defeated by the Perſians. Thus, ſaith he, in the perſon of Critias of theſe ὑπηκοφότες καὶ κατωχριωμένοι, ſtooping, pallid people, that when they ſaw him, they came chearfully toward him, ſuppoſing that he brought πνὰ λυγρὰν ἀγγελίαν ſome ſad news or other; ἐφαίνοντο γὰρ ὅτοι ὡς τὰ κάκιστα εὐχόμενοι, καὶ ἔχαιρον ὅτι τοῖς λυγροῖς, they ſeemed to be men that prayed for all that was ill, and rejoiced in ſad events: and their firſt queſtion, ſaith he, was, πῶς τὰ τῆς πόλεως καὶ τὰ τῆς κόσμου, how the affairs of the city and the world went, (that is, of Rome, and the Roman Empire, as that is called οἰκουμένη the world in the Scripture; or elſe the affairs of the world, meaning the Roman Enterpriſe againſt the Perſians) and being anſwer'd by him, that all was well, they nodded, ſaith he, with their brows preſently, and replyed οὐκ ὄντω, δυσχερῆ γὰρ ἡ πόλις, 'Tis not ſo, but the city is in an ill condition: and afterwards, ὡς μεταλλαγῶσι τὰ πράγματα, ἀταξίαι τε καὶ ταραχαὶ τὴν πόλιν καταλήψονται, τὰ στρατόπεδα ἥττονα τῶν ἐναντίων γενήσονται, that there ſhould be a change, that diſorders and troubles ſhould ſeize upon the city, their Armies ſhould be worſted by the enemies; adding that they had faſted ten days, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς παννύχους ἀμφδίας ἐπαγρυπνήσαντες, and watching all nights, and ſpending the time in ſinging hymns had dream'd theſe things; which may obſcurely refer to theſe Viſions which John ſaw on the κυριακὴ, Lord's day, that is, probably on the annual day of Chriſt's reſurrection, which followed a time of faſting and praying, the Chriſtian Lent, which, as appears by the ſtory of the firſt times, was uncertainly obſerved in reſpect of the number of days, by ſome more, by ſome fewer than ten days. Or if this be but a conjecture, yet the time of ſeeing viſions being in Scripture oft ſet down after, or in a time of faſting, (as Acts 10. 10. of S. Peter, and v. 30. of Cornelius) 'tis agreeable to the character of Chriſtians, whom he deſired to deſcribe in that dialogue, thus to ſet it. And then he adviſes them τὰς ἀλλοκότους ταύτας φαντασίας, καὶ τὰ πονηρὰ βουλεύματα, &c. μήπω θεὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς κόραξας βάλοι, διὰ τὸ τῇ πατρίδι ἐπαρᾶσθαι καὶ λόγους κιβδήλους διατιμίζειν, to leave off thoſe ſtrange fancies, and wicked conſultations, and divinations (which may well refer, in his dark manner of ſpeaking, to this book of Revelation) leſt God, ſaith he, deſtroy you for curſing your country, and ſpreading ſuch falſe reports, when (ſaith he) the Perſians are ſubdued by the Roman forces. And ſo he gives them over as doaters, and means not to heed what they ſay, with a τὰς δὲ λύρας ἐάσομεν, and ὁ φορμὸς Ἱπποκλείδου. That this opinion he conceived of Chriſtians and their their ill affection to the Roman Empire and City, and their boding ill concerning them, was the effect of ſome ſparkles of this prophecy, flown abroad among the Gentiles very early, even in Trajan's time, is more than probable out of theſe paſſages thus ſet down. So in a narration of Hippolytus ſet down by Palladius, we have a virgin Chriſtian accuſed to the heathen Judge at Corinth, ὡς βλασφημοῦσαν καὶ τοὺς καιροὺς, καὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς, καὶ τὰ εἴδωλα, as one that blaſphemed the ſeaſons, and the Kings, and the Idols, in probability, that ſhe foretold evil, talked of ruine, that ſhould befal the Government or Idolatry of the heathens, and that the ſeaſons of it now approached. For that is the meaning of the like phraſe, when the Jews ſay of Stephen, that he ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt the holy place and the Law, Acts 6. 13. for ſo it follows, ver. 14. we have heard him ſay that Jeſus ſhall deſtroy, &c. To which it will not be amiſs farther to add, that the Jews in their paraphraſes on the Old Teſtament, taking Rome under the prophetick title of Edom (which is very agreeable to the ſtyle of Babylon here) do frequently foretel the deſtruction of it. And thereupon they that ſet out the later Venice Edition of the Bible, leave out many paſſages of the Chaldee paraphraſe and the Rabbines looking thus directly againſt Rome, which are extant in the former Venice Bibles, and in what hath been printed at Paris by Stephanus. As when Obad. 1. Kimchi ſaith, What the Prophets ſay of the deſtruction of Edom in the latter days, they ſay of Rome, they leave out the words of Rome: and when 'tis there added, For when Rome ſhall be deſtroyed, there ſhall be redemption of Iſrael, thoſe words are quite omitted. So in the laſt verſe of Obadiah, the fenced great city of Eſau, and that fenced city is Rome, that latter part is left out again. So the Chaldee paraphraſe on Lam. 4. 21, 22. for thou daughter of Edom, hath, thou Rome in the land of Italy; But thoſe words are left out in that Edition. See M. Taylor's Proem to the tranſlation of the Jeruſalem Targum. The like interpretations of Rome for Edom, and the deſtruction thereof, may be ſeen in the Jeruſalem Targum, Gen. 15. 12. where theſe words, Terror tenebricoſus magnus cadens ſuper eum, are thus myſtically rendred, Terror is eſt Babel, tenebricoſus hic eſt Media, magnus hic eſt Græcia, cadens iſte eſt Idumæa (i. Romanum imperium.) Illud eſt imperium quartum, quod cadere debet, neque reſurget in ſecula ſeculorum. And ſo again on Levit. 26. 44. after Babel, Media, Greece, they name again regnum Idumææ, meaning, no doubt, the Roman Empire thereby; adding, in diebus Gog, which that it belongs to the Romans that deſtroyed Jeruſalem, and, ſay they, ſhould after be deſtroyed by the Meſſias, ſee that Paraphraſe on Numb. 11. 26. in theſe words, In fine extremo dierum Gog & Magog, exercitus eorum Hieroſolymam aſcendent, & manibus Regis Meſſiæ illi cadent, They ſhall be deſtroyed by the hands of Meſſiah the King. So in the Sibylline Oracles, where Βελιὰς, Beliar or Belial is ſet to denote the Romans, as appears by Laufiac. Hiſt. cap. primo.

Ἐκ δὲ Σεβαστῶν ἥξει Βελιὰς μετόπωθεν,

Beliar ſhall come from the Auguſti, or Roman Emperors, at length coming to the great deſtruction threatned by God, under the expreſſion of fire, this is to fall upon Beliar peculiarly,

Ἀλλ' ὁπόταν μεγάλοιο θεοῦ πλάσσωσιν ἀπειλαὶ
Καὶ δύναμις φλογέουσα δι' ὄσματος εἰς γαῖαν ἥξει, Καὶ Βελιὰς φλέξει, καὶ ταρφιάλους ἀνθρώπους
Πάντας, ὅσοι τούτῳ πίστιν ἐπεποιήσαντο.

The flaming power of God ſhall burn Beliar, and all the proud men that truſt in him. And of the Jews 'tis clear, that there hath been a tradition among them, that in the laſt days there ſhould come a great enemy, which they call ארמילום Armilus, which in Hebrew is Romulus, lightly changed by the tranſpoſition but of one letter, (ſee Note on John 11. b.) and that he ſhould be deſtroyed by the Meſſias; which may well be (as all the reſt) but the miſtakings of this prophecy here delivered, and from hand to hand conveyed among the Jews to their poſterity, who looking on the Romans as their deſtroyers, thence perſwaded themſelves that their Meſſias (whom they ſtill expect) ſhould deſtroy them.

V. 8. She ſhall be utterly burnt. The κατακαυθήσεται, which is ordinarily rendred, ſhall be utterly burnt, may ſeem to have ſome difficulty in it, and be objected againſt our interpretation of this viſion, becauſe it is known that the deſolation and firing by Alaricus, Genſericus and Totilas, was not an utter deſolation or firing of the whole city, but of a part thereof. And to this the anſwer is inſufficient, that κατακαίεσθαι is conflagrare, to be ſet on light fire, and doth not neceſſarily import that fires conſuming of all that might be conſumed, becauſe other expreſſions here follow in this matter which cannot be ſo anſwered: as v. 21. where the ſtone like a mill-ſtone is caſt into the ſea, which ſeems to ſignifie a total deſtruction, and it is added, Thus with violence ſhall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no longer, καὶ μὴ ὑπ. καὶ μὴ ἔτι And ſo again, ver. 22. 23. The voice of harpers, &c. and the ſound of a mill-ſtone ſhall be found no more in thee, and the light of a candle ſhall ſhine no more in thee, &c. To all which the anſwer muſt be, by obſerving that all theſe three expreſſions are phraſes taken out of the propheſies of the Old Teſtament, and are in all reaſon to ſignifie here as they ſhall appear to have ſignified, that is, only as prophetical ſchemes of expreſſing a ſubduing, or victory, and no more. Thus the burning here is an alluſion to Dan. 7. 11. his body deſtroyed and given to the burning flame, which yet ſignified no more than the tranſlating of the Monarchy from the Seleucidæ to the Romans; and proportionably here the ſubduing this heathen city to the faith of Chriſt, which was the effect of this blow that befel Rome. So the throwing the great ſtone into the ſea, v. 21. alludes to Jer. 51. 63. Thou ſhalt caſt a ſtone into the midſt of Euphrates, and ſay, Thus ſhall Babylon fall, and ſhall not riſe, &c. And yet Babylon long continued a great city, though the dominion of it was tranſlated from the Chaldæans to the Medes. And for the voice of the harpers, &c. v. 23. it alludes to Jer. 25. 10. I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladneſs, the voice of the Bridegroom, and the voice of the Bride, the ſound of the mill-ſtones, and the light of candle. And yet Judæa, of which that is ſpoken, ſtill had people inhabiting it. And ſo theſe expreſſions, thus interpreted, as in the Paraphraſe they have been, are perfectly agreeable to the ſenſe which muſt needs belong to them in theſe other places where they are uſed by the Prophets. Mean while how great the deſtruction was that now befel that city, may competently appear by one teſtimony of Palladius that lived at that time, Lauſiac. Hiſt. c. 118. in theſe words, Θυελλά τις βαρβαρικὴ ἢ καὶ ἐν παροιμίαις πάλαι κειμένη ἐπέπεσε τῇ Ῥώμῃ, καὶ οὐκ εἴασεν οὐδὲ τοὺς ἐπ' ἀγορᾷ ἀνδριάντας χαλκοῦς, ἀλλὰ πάντα προδήλασα βαρβαρικῇ ἀπονοίᾳ παρέδωκεν ἀπωλείᾳ, ὡς γενέσθαι τῷ Ῥώμῃ τῷ ἐν χιλίοις διακοσίοις ἔτεσιν φιλοκαλησθεῖσαν, κατὰ τὸν τῆς Σιβύλλης ῥῆσιν, ῥύμῃ. A certain barbarian tempeſt, which the Prophets of old had foretold, ſeized on Rome, and left not ſo much as the brazen ſtatues in the ſtreets, but plundering all with a barbarous madneſs, delivered it up to deſtruction, ſo that Rome which had flouriſhed a thouſand and two hundred years, according to the Sibyls word, became a deſolation.

b. Κατακαυθήσεται.

Μύλου. λίθος εἰς θαλασσαν.

c. Σώματα.

V. 13. Slaves.] Σώματα, ſaith Julius Pollux, ſignifies, when it is taken ſimply by it ſelf, without any additament, thoſe that are not bond ſlaves but freemen, which ſell or hire themſelves for money, Σώματα ἁπλῶς ἐκ ἂν δέλα σώματα, &c. And this, becauſe free men have power over their own bodies, whereas ſlaves have nothing but ſouls. As for the ψυχαὶ ἀνθρώπων, ſouls of men, the phraſe is taken out of Ezechiel, c. 17. 13. who ſpeaking of Tyre, a City of Merchants, ſaith, that they traffick בנפש אדם ſuper anima hominis, for the ſoul of man. which S. Hierome renders renders mancipia, ſlaves, and ſo the latter Greeks call ſlaves ψυχάρια, little ſouls; and ſo Gen. 12. 5. the ſouls which they had gotten in Haran, may be their bond-ſervants, becauſe, as was ſaid, ſlaves have ſouls, though nothing elſe in their own power.

d. Εμποροι σου. V. 23. Thy Merchants.] Who are thy Merchants here, may be thought uncertain, becauſe the word thy either may refer to foreign nations, who trade with thee, or elſe may be thy traders or traffickers, the chapmen in Rome. In this latter ſenſe ſome learned men have choſen to take it, that the Roman luxury was ſo great, that tradeſmen that dealt in ſelling of commodities lived there like Princes. But if we compare this place with what is ſaid of Tyrus, Ezech. 27. the former will appear to be the ſenſe of it: for there v. 12. Tarſhiſh was thy Merchant, and v. 13. Javan, &c. were thy Merchants; and ſo the meaning is clearly this, that the Merchants of other Nations that traffick'd with Rome, had ſuch vent for their commodities there at any rate that they grew very rich by it.

CHAP. XIX.

Paraphraſe.

1. Another viſion I received much to the ſame purpoſe with the former; but differing in this, that the former looked eſpecially on the city of Rome, and the luxury and pride of the inhabitants thereof, but this looked eſpecially on the heathen religion there deſtroyed, and exchanged for the Chriſtian, but that not all at once, but by ſeveral ſteps and degree: and firſt, methought I heard a multitude of Chriſtian people, (employed like the Saints and Angels in heaven) ſinging of Allelujahs, praiſes and thankſgivings to God, as to him who had wrought great mercies for them.

1. AND after theſe things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, ſaying, Allelujah, Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God.]

2. Magnifying his fidelity to themſelves, and his juſt vengeance on the Idolatrous perſecutors, that had debauched ſo many to their courſes, and ſhed ſo much blood of Chriſtians.

2. For true and righteous are his judgments, for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his ſervants at her hand.]

3. And again triumphing in this act of God's, that this was like to be a fatal irreparable blow to the Roman Idolatry.

3. And * again they ſaid, Allelujah: and her ſmoak † aroſe up for ever and ever.]

* The ſecond time, δεύτερον.

4. And the Biſhops or repreſentatives or governors of the Chriſtian Church in Judæa, ch. 4. 4. and proportionably to them, all other Biſhops, and the four Apoſtles, formerly mention'd as the planters of the Chriſtian faith in Judæa, ch. 4 6. and two of them now in Rome alſo, Peter and Paul, gave their acclamations to thoſe Hallelujahs.

4. And the four and twenty Elders, and the four * beaſts fell down and worſhipped God that ſat on the throne, ſaying, Amen, Allelujah.]

* Living creatures, ζῶα.

5. And all Chriſtians in the world, of what quality ſoever, were admoniſhed of their duty and obligation to do ſo too.

5. And a voice came out of the throne, ſaying, Praiſe our God, all ye his ſervants, and ye that fear him both ſmall and great.]

6. And that admonition was preſently anſwer'd with the acclamation of all the nations (that is, Chriſtian people in them) over all the world, thundring out Allelujahs to God, for this illuſtrious enlargement of the kingdom of Chriſt, the converſion of that Imperial City to Chriſtianity.

6. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thundrings, ſaying, Allelujah, for the Lord God † omnipotent reigneth.]

Which is, as it were, the marriage of Chriſt to a lovely ſpouſe his Church, (and ſo matter of rejoicing to all that hear of it, Joh. 3. 29.) which ſhould now be adorned as the Prieſt entring into the ſanctuary under the Law, to note the liberty and the privileges which ſhould be beſtowed on the Church by the Emperor Conſtantine.

7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made her ſelf ready.

8. And to her was granted that ſhe ſhould be arrayed in fine linnen, clean and white: for the fine linnen is the a * righteouſneſs of ſaints.]

a. * Ordinances of the holies.

9. And an Angel bad me take notice of this, as of the bleſſedeſt happieſt change that ever was wrought in the world, and happy he that ſhould be a ſpectator of it. Of which yet I might be as confident it would come, as if I ſaw it, God having firmly decreed and made promiſe of it.

9. And he ſaith unto me, Write, Bleſſed are they which are called unto the marriage ſupper of the Lamb. And he ſaith unto me, Theſe are the true ſayings of God.]

10. And the joy of this news ſo tranſported me, that as Abraham, for the joy of the good news, Gen. 17. 17. fell on his face, &c. ſo I could not but fall down to acknowledge my ſenſe of ſo bleſſed a news and meſſenger: But when I did ſo, he bid me forbear. For, ſaith he, I am no more honourably employ'd by Chriſt than thou art, I am now a meſſenger to make known this prophecy to thee of the converſion of Emperors, &c. to the Goſpel, and thou and ſuch as thou, Apoſtles of Chriſt, are Embaſſadors of as honourable and bleſſed news as this. Let God have the praiſe of all: for to be an Apoſtle of Chriſt, a witneſs and publiſher of his reſurrection, &c. is to be a Prophet ſent and endued with the Spirit of God, and ſo as valuable as that office which now I am executing, of foretelling things to come.

10. And I fell at his feet to worſhip him: and he ſaid unto me, ſee thou do it not, I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren, that have the teſtimony of Jeſus: worſhip God, for the teſtimony of Jeſus is the Spirit of propheſie.]

11. And methought I ſaw Chriſt coming from heaven in a pompous manner, riding or ſitting upon the white horſe (as he did c. 6. 2.) that is, in the preaching of the Goſpel, and according to his promiſe, and his juſt judgments againſt his enemies, proceeding againſt them, that is, againſt the Emperor Maxentius (ſee c. 16. 12, 14.)

11. And I ſaw heaven open'd, and behold a white horſe, and he that ſat upon him was called Faithful and true, and in righteouſneſs he doth judge and make war.]

12. And methought his eyes were like fire, ſearching to the ſecrets of the heart (noting him to judge and diſcern who are fit to be deſtroyed, who not) and he had many crowns on his head, tokens and teſtimonies of as many victories over enemies, whom he had overcome either by their yielding, that is, converſion, or falling before him, that is, deſtruction; and as a token of thoſe victories, he hath a note or ticket by which to receive his reward, which no body ſees but himſelf, (ſee ch. 2. 17. and note i.) that is, he is acknowledged victorious.

12. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns, and he had a name written that no man knew but he himſelf.]

13. And he was in a royal purple garment, noting that regal power to which he was inſtalled as a reward of his crucifixion, Iſa. 63. 1, 2. Phil. 2. 9. now to belong to him moſt illuſtrioully; and his name in which he was repreſented, was that known title of Chriſt, The word of God, noting that which is now done to be an effect of divine power, wrought by his word, without any viſible working of ordinary means toward it.

13. And he was cloathed in a veſture dipt in blood, and his name is called, The word of God.]

14. And the Angels the miniſters of his vengeance attended him in a glorious and ſplendid manner.

14. And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horſes, clothed in fine linnen, white and clean.]

15. And out of his mouth proceeded that terrible ſharp part of the Goſpel, his threats againſt his enemies, and thoſe now to be executed on the heathen, whom he ſhall now ſubdue by his power, becauſe they will not be converted, in which reſpect he is now preparing for them the bittereſt poiſonous potion that ever was drank by any.

15. And out of his mouth goeth a ſharp ſword, that with it he ſhould ſmite the nations, and he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron, and he treadeth the wine-preſs of the † fierceneſs and wrath of almighty God.]

16. And

16. And he hath b on his veſture and on his thigh a name writtten, King of kings, and Lord of lords.

16. And by this means he will ſhew himſelf what really he is, too ſtrong for any power on earth to reſiſt or ſtand out againſt. b.

17. And I ſaw an Angel ſtanding in the ſun, and he cried with a loud voice, ſaying to all the fowls that flie in the midſt of heaven, Come and gather your ſelves together to the ſupper of the great God,]

17. And methought I ſaw an Angel ſtanding in the ſun (noting the clearneſs of the viſion now delivered,) and he called to all the birds of prey, Goths and Vandals, &c. that they ſhould come, as to a feaſt, to this judgment of God upon theſe Idolaters, (noting the great ſlaughter which was now foretold, to which Vultures do betake themſelves out of a natural ſagacity, as Job ſaith of the Eagle, Where the ſlain are, there is he.)

* Rulers of thouſands, χιλιάρχων.

18. That ye may eat the fleſh of Kings, and the fleſh of * captains, and the fleſh of mighty men, and the fleſh of horſes, and of them that ſit on them, and the fleſh of all men both free and bond, both ſmall and great.]

18. And telling them that there ſhould be abundant prey for them, an huge deſtruction.

19. And I ſaw the beaſts and the Kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to make war againſt him that ſat on the horſe, and againſt his army.]

19. And the Idol-worſhip ſet up at Rome, and under her dominion, ſet it ſelf to perſecute Chriſtianity.

20. And the beaſt was taken, and with him the falſe prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beaſt, and them that worſhipped his image. Theſe both were caſt alive into a lake burning with brimſtone.]

20. And the Roman Idolatry, and the Magick, and Auguries, and the divinations of the heathen Prieſts, that had deceived the carnal Chriſtians ſo far as to conſent and comply with the heatheniſh Idolatry, were to be like Sodom and Gomorrah, utterly extirpated: ſee ch. 13. 11. and note g.

21. And the remnant were ſlain with the ſword of him that ſat upon the horſe, which ſword proceeded out of his mouth, and all the fowls were filled with their fleſh.]

21. And the reſt, that is, all the ſecret Idolaters, were ſwept away in the ſame deſtruction alſo, (for thinking that theſe armies againſt Rome would be favourable to any more than to the Orthodox, pure Chriſtians, they then thought it a fit time to diſcover themſelves, but ſtrangely miſcarried in it, the Chriſtians that fled to the Baſilica, or Temple, being the only perſons that found deliverance, ſee note on chap. 17. e.) and ſo all their Idol-worſhip was deſtroyed, (which is the ſum of this Chapter.)

Annotations on Chap. XIX.

a. Δικαιώματα τῶν ἁγίων.

V. 8. Righteouſneſs of the Saints.] Some difficulty there is in this phraſe, τὰ δικαιώματα ἐστι τῶν ἁγίων, which is ordinarily rendred the righteouſneſs of the ſaints. For the word δικαιώματα is not thus uſed in theſe books, (ſee Note on Rom. 8. b.) but for the Ordinances of the Moſaical law. And then ἅγια being the very word which is uſed to denote the Sanctuary, Heb. 8. 2. ἁγίων λειτουργὸς, the miniſter of the ſanctuary, and ἅγια the ſanctuary, ch. 9. 2. and elſwhere, and τῶν ἁγίων being the Neuter as well as the Maſculine gender, and by conſequence capable of being accommodated to this ſenſe, it is not improbable that δικαιώματα ἁγίων ſhould denote the ordinances of the ſanctuary, the Levitical laws or cuſtoms, among which this was one, that the Prieſt, when he went into the Sanctuary, ſhould wear that veſture of fine linnen, pure and white. Thus Levit. 16. 'tis appointed, Thus ſhall Aaron come into the holy place, v. 3. He ſhall put on the holy linnen coat, and he ſhall have the linnen breeches upon his fleſh, and ſhall be girded with a linnen girdle, and with the linnen mitre ſhall he be attired: theſe are holy garments, &c. that is, the garments which he is to uſe when he goes into the Sanctuary, which being appointed him by this law of God to Moſes, may fitly be called δικαιώματα τῶν ἁγίων, the ordinances of the holies. And if it be ſo, then it will moſt fitly be applied to this Spouſe of Chriſt, the Chriſtian Church (to which Chriſt was ready ſo ſolemnly to be married, ver. 7. in reſpect of the publick profeſſion of the Chriſtian Religion by the Emperor Conſtantine and his Courtiers) that it ſhould now be cloathed after the manner of the prieſt when he went into the Sanctuary, to note the great liberty and immunities and privileges now beſtow'd on the Church by the Emperor. This we have formerly ſeen expreſs'd by our being Kings and Prieſts unto God, (chap. 1. Note c.) Prieſts in reſpect of liberty of aſſemblies, and executing the office of Biſhops, &c. in the Church: Which being ſo eminently beſtowed on the Church by Conſtantine, above all that ever had been in the Church before, may here in like manner be moſt fitly expreſs'd by being clothed in the holy garments, which denoted the Prieſts going into the Sanctuary.

b. Ἱμάτιον καὶ μηρὸς.

V. 16. On his veſture and on his thigh.] The mention of the ἱμάτιον and μηρὸς, veſture and thigh, are here put together to denote the robe Imperial by the former, and the ſword, which is girded on the thigh, by the latter, as enſigns of ſupreme power and authority, eſpecially when on them both, on the robe and the hilt of the ſword, as the enſign of that office, is written that moſt honourable title, KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS, thereby noting him to be ſuperior to all power and force in the world, triumphantly victorious over all.

CHAP. XX. Paraphraſe.

1. AND I ſaw an Angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain † in his hand.

† Upon, ἐπὶ

1. And I ſaw another repreſentation, by which I diſcerned what ſhould ſucceed the converſion of heathen Rome to Chriſtianity, viz. a tranquility and flouriſhing eſtate of Chriſtianity for ſome time, though not for ever. And firſt, methought I ſaw an angel coming from heaven, a token of very good news at this time and elſewhere (as ſometimes of judgments from God) with the key of hell, and a great chain in his hand (to ſignifie what follows, v. 2. that Satan ſhould now be ſhut up and chained.)

2. And he laid hold on the Dragon, that old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a thouſand years,]

2. And he apprehended the Devil, that is ſet down under the title of Satan and the Dragon in former viſions, c. 12. 9. and bound him for the ſpace of a thouſand years, noting the tranquillity and freedom from perſecutions that ſhould be allowed the Church of Chriſt from the time of Conſtantine's coming to the Empire.

3. And caſt him into the bottomleſs pit, and * ſhut him up, and ſet a ſeal upon him that he ſhould deceive the nations no more, till the thouſand years ſhould be fulfilled, and after that he muſt be looſed a little ſeaſon.]

3. And he ſecured him there by all ways of ſecurity, binding, locking, ſealing him up, that he might not deceive and corrupt the world to idolatry, as till then he had done, but permit the Chriſtian profeſſion to flouriſh till theſe thouſand years were at an end, and after that he ſhould get looſe again for ſome time, and make ſome havock in the Chriſtian world.

4. And

4. And I ſaw chairs and ſome ſitting upon them, that is, Chriſtian aſſemblies and judicatures, and ſuch a general profeſſion of Chriſtianity, in oppoſition to the idolatries of the heathens, thoſe in the Capitol at Rome, and the like unto them in other places of the Roman Empire (ſee note on c. 13. b.) as if all that had died for Chriſt, and held out conſtantly againſt all the heathen perſecutions, had now been admitted to live and reign with Chriſt, that is, to live quiet, flouriſhing, Chriſtian lives here, for that ſpace of a thouſand years, v. 5.

4. And I ſaw thrones, and they that ſat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I ſaw the ſouls of them that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, and for the word of God, and which had not worſhipped the beaſt, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they [a] lived and reigned with Chriſt a thouſand years.]

5. As for the old Idolaters or Gnoſticks, there was nothing like them now to be ſeen, nor ſhould be till the end of this ſpace of a thouſand years. This is it that is proverbially deſcribed by the firſt reſurrection, that is, a flouriſhing condition of the Church under the Meſſias.

5. But [b] the reſt of the dead lived not again until the thouſand years were finiſhed. this is the [c] firſt reſurrection.]

6. Bleſſed and holy, that is, ſafe (ſeparate from all danger) are all they that are really in the number of thoſe that partake effectually of theſe benefits, who as they are reſcued from thoſe deſtructions which the Roman tyranny threatned them with, which is the interpretation of the ſecond death, ſo they ſhall now have the bleſſing of free undiſturb'd aſſemblies for all this ſpace: ſee c. 1. note d.

6. Bleſſed and holy is he that hath part in the firſt reſurrection: on ſuch [d] the ſecond death hath no power, but they ſhall be Prieſts of God and of Chriſt, and ſhall reign with him a thouſand years.]

7. But after this ſpace, the ſins of Chriſtians provoking God to it, this reſtraint being taken off from Satan, he ſhall fall a diſturbing the Chriſtian profeſſion again. (This fell out about a thouſand years after the date of Conſtantine's edict for the liberty of the Chriſtian profeſſion, at which time the Mahomedan religion was brought into Greece, a ſpecial part of the Roman Empire.)

e.

7. And when the [e] thouſand years are expired, Satan ſhall be looſed out of his priſon.]

8. And then ſhall he ſet about the ſeducing of men in all quarters to the Mahomedan or other falſe religions, particularly Gog and Magog, the inhabitants of thoſe Countries where the Mahomedan religion began to flouriſh, to engage them in vaſt numbers in a war to invade and waſte the Chriſtian Church in Greece, &c.

8. And ſhall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four † quarters of the earth, [f] Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battel, the number of whom is as the ſand of the ſea.]

9. And accordingly, methought, they did, they went in great numbers, and beſieged and took Conſtantinople, that city ſo precious in God's eyes for the continuance of the pure Chriſtian profeſſion in it, and known among the Grecians by the name of new Sion, and in the chief Church there, called the Church of Sophia, they ſet up the worſhip of Mahomet, (juſt two hundred years ago:) And thoſe that did ſo, are in their poſterity to be deſtroyed, (and though it be not yet done, 'tis to be expected in God's good time, when Chriſtians that are thus puniſhed for their ſins ſhall reform and amend their lives.)

9. And they went upon the breadth of the earth, and compaſſed the camp of the Saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.]

10. And the Devil, methought, that wrought in them, that ſtirred them up, was remanded and returned again into his priſon, and this empire of his was again deſtroyed, as the idol-worſhip of the heathens, and the Magicians, Sorcerers, Augurs, and heathen Prieſts before had been.

10. And the Devil that deceived them was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, where the beaſt and the falſe prophet are, and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.]

11. And after this, in another part of this viſion I ſaw, methought, a throne ſet up in great ſplendor and glory, and Chriſt in majeſty ſitting thereon, very terrible, and a new condition of all things in the world was now to be expected. (And ſo that which was the deſign of all theſe viſions, (ſent in an Epiſtle to the ſeven Churches, to teach them conſtancy in preſſures) is ſtill here clearly made good, that though Chriſtianity be perſecuted, and, for the ſins of the vicious profeſſors thereof, permitted oft to be brought very low, yet God will ſend relief to them that are faithful, reſcue the conſtant walker, and deſtroy the deſtroyer, and finally caſt out Satan out of his poſſeſſions; and then, as here, come to judge the world in that laſt eternal doom.)

11. And I ſaw a great white throne, and him that ſat on it, from whoſe face the earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them.]

12. And all that ever died were called out of their graves before him: and as for the judging every one, the rolls or records of all their actions were produced, and withal another book brought forth, called the book of life, (ſee note on Rev. 3. b.) wherein every one's name is entred that ever undertook God's ſervice, and blotted out again, if they were fallen off from him, and according to their works, ſo were their names continued in that book of life, if they continued faithful unto death, but not otherwiſe.

12. And I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before * God: and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books according to their works.]

* Or the throne, the King's MS. reads τῷ θρόνῳ.

13. And all that were buried in the ſea, that is, periſhed by water, and all that were dead and laid in graves, and all that any other way were dead, came out of their graves, their bodies were re-united to their ſouls, and every one was judged according to his works.

13. And the ſea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and † hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works.]

† Hades.

14. And then death it ſelf was deſtroyed eternally, an everlaſting being now ſucceeding in the place of this frail mortal one. And this is it that is proverbially called the ſecond death, wherein this whole world hath its period and conſummation.

14. And death and * hell were caſt into the lake of fire: this is the ſecond death.]

* Hades.

15. And whoſoever had not his name found written and continued in (not blotted out of) the book of life v. 12. whoſoever died not conſtant in the faith, he was caſt out into eternal fire.

15. And whoſoever was not found written in the book of life, was caſt into the lake of fire.]

Annotations on Chap. XX.

a. Ἔζησαν καὶ ἐβασίλευσαν μετὰ Χριστοῦ.

V. 4. Lived and reigned with Chriſt.] The meaning of the thouſand years living and reigning with Chriſt of thoſe that were beheaded, &c. may perhaps be ſufficiently cleared and underſtood, by obſerving theſe three things; 1. That there is no mention of any new reign of Chriſt on earth, but only of them that were beheaded, and of them which had not worſhip'd, &c. living and reigning with Chriſt. The doctrine of the Millenaries ſuppoſes the former, that Chriſt muſt come down on earth, and have a new kingdom here in this world. But this thoſe mens living and reigning with Chriſt doth not ſuppoſe, but rather the contrary, that the kingdom of Chriſt here ſpoken of, is that which he had before, and which is every where called his kingdom, and that now only thoſe that had been killed, and baniſh'd out of it before, were admitted into a participation of that kingdom, μετὰ τῦ Χριστῦ, with Chriſt. Now what this living and reigning of the beheaded, &c. (then beginning) was, may appear by conſidering what is meant, firſt, by the beheaded, and others here named; then ſecondly, by their living and reigning. The beheaded are they that reſiſted unto blood in their combats againſt the Heathen idolatry and practices, the conſtant ſervants of Chriſt that perſevered ſo till death, and that in oppoſition to the beaſt and his image, to that which was practiſed in Rome to Jupiter Capitolinus, and the tranſcripts of it in other places (ſee Note on c. 13. g. and r.) and ſo all thoſe phraſes conclude clude the ſubject of the propoſition to be the pure, conſtant, perſevering Chriſtians. One thing only is to be obſerved of theſe, that by them are not ſignified the ſame particular perſons or individual members of the Church that had formerly been ſlain, any more then the ſame individual perſons of the reſt of the dead, v.5. (that is, of the Apoſtatizing unchriſtian livers) can be thought to have lived again after the end of the thouſand years, when they are ſaid to be revived, and ſo Satan to be let looſe a little while; but rather on the one ſide, as on the other, a ſucceſſion of ſuch as they were, the Church of Chriſt being to be conſidered as a tranſient body, ſuch as a river, &c. which always runs in a ſucceſſion of parts, one following the other in a perpetual motion and mutation: In which Πύλαι ᾅδου reſpect I ſuppoſe it is ſaid of the Church, that the gates of hades ſhall never prevail againſt it, that is, that it ſhall never be deſtroyed, which of any particular perſons, or the Church of all the Chriſtians of any one age, cannot ſo fitly be affirmed, but only of the Church in the perpetual ſucceſſion of Chriſtians. And then for theſe mens living and reigning, firſt, it muſt be obſerved, that 'tis not here ſaid that they revived, or were raiſed, as the Millenaries pretenſions ſuppoſe, but only that they lived and reigned, which two being oppoſite to dying, and being ſubject to others, will denote a peaceable, proſperous, flouriſhing eſtate of the Orthodox profeſſors, inſtead of their former ſad and perſecuted condition. For that is the meaning of living, as may appear by the title ὁ ζῶν living given to Chriſt, *ch.*1.18. in oppoſition to ἐγενόμην νεκρὸς, I was dead, his illuſtrious, inſtead of his deſpiſed condition; and ſo of reigning, as of being Kings, (ſee note on *c.*1. d.) and of being Kings, and reigning upon the earth, *c.*5.10. And all this together will be one way of evidencing the truth of this interpretation. 2*ly*. The meaning of the phraſe will appear by comparing it with that other phraſe, by which the ſame thing is expreſſed, *v.*1,2,3. binding of Satan, and caſting him into the abyſs, ſhutting and ſealing him up, that he ſhould deceive the nations no more, that is clearly the reſtraining of Satan's malice, and ſhortning of his power in perſecuting and corrupting the Chriſtian Church: by conſent with which, their living and reigning muſt needs ſignify their perſevering and enjoying quiet. Thirdly, by their having and ſitting on thrones, and Θρόνοι Κρῖμα ἐδόθη judgments being given unto them, which literally ſignifies the quiet poſſeſſion of judicatures and cenſures in the Church, that diſcipline by which purity is preſerved, and which is never enjoyed quietly in the Church but by the countenance and favour of Princes, which therefore is to be reſolved the meaning of their reigning (as moſt remarkably they began to do in Conſtantine's time, ſee c. 19.8. who ſet up Eccleſiaſtical judicatures in his Empire) as it is of their ſitting on thrones, whereas the letting Satan looſe is the Ἀνθήσεται Σατανᾶς caſting off theſe cords from them. And this is the clear meaning of the firſt Reſurrection, ſee Note c. As for the ſpace of a thouſand years, ſee Note e.

b. V.5. The reſt of the dead] It follows here, that the Λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν, the reſt of the dead revived not till the thouſand years were done Who the reſt of the dead are is manifeſt; not all beſide the Martyrs, as the Millenaries pretend, but all but thoſe formerly nam'd, *v.*4. that is, all that worſhipp'd the beaſt, or his image, or received his mark in their foreheades or hands, that is, all the Idolaters and Apoſtates, and remainders of Gnoſtick Chriſtians, and all that complied with either, which are called λοιποὶ νεκρῶν, the reſt of the dead moſt fitly. For firſt, it hath been manifeſt, c. 19. 18, 21. that there were others ſlain beſide thoſe that were beheaded for the conſtancy of their confeſſion of Chriſt; nay ſecondly, at this part of the Viſion 'tis clear, that as the conſtant profeſſors were not all ſlain, but only ſome of them beheaded and others preſerved (and ſo beſide the beheaded here are enumerated thoſe that had not worſhip'd the beaſt, nor his image, nor received his mark upon their foreheads or hands) ſo the Idolaters, Apoſtates and Gnoſtick Chriſtians, &c. had their univerſal ſlaughters, c. 19. 2,3. 20. 21. and therefore theſe may well be, οἱ λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν, the reſt of the dead here, it being punctually ſaid of them, c. 19. 21. καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἀπεκτάνθησαν, the reſt were ſlain. And then that they revived not till the thouſand years finiſhed, muſt needs ſignify that the Church was now for that ſpace freed from ſuch heathen perſecutors, and purified from ſuch avow'd mixtures of thoſe vile unchriſtian practices, which is but the negative part annex'd to the poſitive preceding.

c. Ib. Firſt reſurrection] What is meant by the firſt reſurrection here, may be diſcerned by comparing it Ἀνάστασις ἡ πρώτη with the ſecond reſurrection in the ordinary notion of it. That ſignifies the reſurrection to eternal life: Proportionably this muſt ſignify a reviving, a reſtoring to life, tho' not to that eternal. Here it is figuratively uſed to expreſs the flouriſhing condition of the Chriſtian Church for that thouſand years, wherein the Chriſtian profeſſors, in oppoſition to idolatrous Heathens and Gnoſtick Chriſtians, live ſafely and happily in the enjoying the aſſemblies; which is, ſaith he, as if the primitive Martys were fetch'd out of their graves to live again here in tranquility upon the earth. Where only it is to be noted, that the reſurrection here is of the Churth, not of the particular perſons (the beheaded &c.) thus to be underſtood, that the Church that was perſecuted, and ſuppreſs'd, and ſlain as it were, and again corrupted and vitiated in its members, now roſe from the dead, revived again.

d. V.6. The ſecond death] This phraſe the ſecond death Θάνατος ὁ δεύτερος is four times uſed in this book, c. 2. 11. and here *c.*20. 6. then *v.*14. then c. 21. 8. It ſeems to be taken from the Jews, who uſe it proverbially for final, utter, irreverſible deſtruction. So in the Jeruſalem Targum, *Deut.*33.6. Let Reuben live, and let him not die the ſecond death, by which the wicked die in the world to come. Where, whatſoever be ſignified among them by the world to come (the age of the Meſſias in whatſoever Jewiſh notion of it) it ſeems to denote ſuch a death from which there is no releaſe. And according to this notion of it, as it reflects fitly on the firſt death, (which is a deſtruction, but ſuch as is reparable by a reviving or reſurrection, but this paſt hopes, and excluſive of that) ſo will all the ſeveral places wherein 'tis uſed be clearly interpreted, *c.*2.11. he that overcomes ſhall not be hurt by the ſecond death, that is, if this Church ſhall hold out conſtant, it ſhall not be cut off, that is, tho' it ſhall meet with great perſecutions, v.10. and death it ſelf, yet that utter exciſion would no way better be prevented then by this of conſtancy and perſeverance in ſuffering of all. So here, ſpeaking of the flouriſhing condition of the Chriſtian Church, reviving after all its perſecutions and corruptions to a ſtate of tranquility and purity. On theſe, ſaith he, the ſecond death hath no power, that is, they have not incurred that utter exciſion (having their part in the firſt reſurrection) but they ſhall be Prieſts to Chriſt and God, and reign, &c. that is, have a flouriſhing time of Chriſtian profeſſion for that ſpace of a thouſand years. So in ver. 14. where death and hades are caſt into the lake of fire, that is, death and the ſtate of mortality utterly deſtroyed (O death, I will be thy death) it is added, this is the ſecond death, that is, mortality is utterly deſtroyed, there ſhall now be no more death, the life ſhall be eternal: ſo c. 21. 8. the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone (the utter irreverſible deſtruction, ſuch as fell on Sodom, called αἰωνίου πυρὸς eternal fire, utterly conſumptive) is called the ſecond αἰωνίου πυρὸς death, into which they are ſaid to go that are never to appear in the Church again. And tho' in theſe different matters ſome difference there muſt needs be in the ſignifications, yet in all of them the notion of utter deſtruction, final, irreparable exciſion, may very properly be retained, and applied to each of them.

e. V. 7. Thouſand years are expired] When theſe thouſand years of the peaceable Chriſtian profeſſion ſhould χίλια ἔτη begin, and when determine, is a thing of ſome doubt. And the cauſe of the doubt is, the ſeveral points of time wherein the deſtruction of Heatheniſm in the Roman man Empire may be placed. For as in every ſo great a change, there are ſeveral ſtages, or degrees of motion, ſo was it here. Conſtantine's receiving the faith, and concluding of the perſecutions, and by decree proclaiming liberty of Chriſtianity, may moſt properly be ſtyled the binding of Satan, the dragon that ſought to devour the child as ſoon as it was born; and then the beginning of the thouſand years will fall about An. Dom. 311. at which time the converſion of heathen Rome to Chriſtianity is ſet down, and celebrated by Prudentius, l.1. cont. Symmachum, beginning thus,

Cùm princeps gemini bis victor cæde tyranni, &c.

To the ſame purpoſe ſee Euſebius Eccl. hiſt. l. 19. c. 1. But then, after that the Emperors were Chriſtian, Heatheniſm ſtill continued in Rome, and in the Empire, in ſome degree (ſee Note on ch. 17. f.) till by the coming of the Goths, and Vandals, and Huns, under Alaricus, Genſericus and Attilas, the city and Empire of Rome was, all the heathen part of it, deſtroyed, and Chriſtianity fully victorious over it. And if this be the beginning of the binding of Satan, and caſting him into the abyſs, then the thouſand years muſt have another date about the year of Chriſt 450. or 455. the city having been taken by Alaricus and the Goths, A.C. 410. and by Genſericus and the Vandals, An. 455. but the war between Theodoſius and Genſericus beginning An. 441. and the great fight between the Romans under the Emperor Marcion, and the Huns under Atrilas (in which 162000 were killed) being A.C. 451. the greateſt ſlaughter that hath ever been read of, as it is deſcribed by Jornandes, a little river being by the blood of the ſlain raiſed, ſaith he, into a torrent. Agreeable to this double beginning may be aſſign'd a double end to theſe thouſand years. For if the letting looſe of Satan here were at the riſing of the Ottoman family, and bringing Aſia and Greece to Mahometiſm, that will be about the year 1310. and ſo about a thouſand years from Conſtantine's Edict: But if it were at the Turks taking of Conſtantinople (mentioned here v. 9.) and turning the Temple of Sophia to Mahometan-worſhip about the year 1450. then will that be about a thouſand years from the ſacking of Rome by Genſericus. But the former of theſe interpretations is moſt fit for the place, that from Conſtantine's Edict to the planting of Mahometiſm in Greece by Ottoman. For the taking of Conſtantinople is mentioned after this letting looſe of Satan, and therefore is not it ſelf in any reaſon to be defined that point of time wherein he was let looſe, but rather that other wherein Mahometiſm began to proſper; for then the Chriſtian religion fell under heavy perſecutions again, which is contrary to the Martyrs living and reigning (as it hath been explained to ſignify, Note a. & c. 1. e.) which was to laſt for the whole thouſand years; and did ſo in the former account, but wants ſevenſcore years of it in the latter. I can foreſee but one objection againſt this beginning of the thouſand years from Conſtantine, and that is the practices of Julian againſt the Chriſtians, which ſoon followed Conſtantines favour to them; which may conſequently be thought unreconcileable with the truth of this prediction thus interpreted, the peace of the Church, and ceſſation from perſecution for that ſpace. But to this the anſwer will be eaſy, that Julian, altho' himſelf an Apoſtate, was yet for ſome time ſo far from attempting to perſecute the Chriſtian religion, that he choſe rather to diſſemble his own, and to make as if he were a Chriſtian. So ſaith Aſterius that lived in his time, Hom. 3. De avarit. Τὸ προσωπεῖον τῦ χριστιανῦ ἀθρόον ἀποδύεται, γυμνώσας ᾗ τὸ δρᾶμα τὸ κομιδῆ, ὃ ἐν πολλῷ τῷ χρόνῳ καθυπεκρίνατο, &c. He put off the vizard of the Chriſtian, and laid open the ſcene, by drawing the curtain, which he had a long time kept cloſe: and to that purpoſe Epiphaniæ feſto templum Chriſtianorum ingreſſus eſt, ſolenniter numine invocato, he went to the Chriſtian Church at their Chriſtmas feſtivities, and ſolemnly join'd in the ſervice, ſaith Ammianus Marcellinus. After, when he came to put off the diſguiſe, and to appear, as he was, an enemy of the Chriſtians, yet this he did more by ſubtilty then violence, arte potius quàm poteſtate, he made uſe of art more then power, ſaith Oroſius, l. 7. c. 30. as all writers both prophane and eccleſiaſtical acknowledge. All that Ammianus mentions of his cruelty, is that he permitted not the ſchools of Grammar or Rhetorick to be open for them, Inter quæ erat inclemens, quòd docere vetuit Magiſtros Rhetoricos & Grammaticos Chriſtianos, nè tranſirent à numinum cultu, One of his faults was his cruelty to the Chriſtians, that he forbad the Maſters to teach them, for fear they ſhould forſake the worſhip of the gods, li. 25. to which the Chriſtian writers add, that he admitted them not into the army, nor offices, nor to honours, Ut negaretur fides Chriſti, honoribus magis provocare, quàm tormentis cogere ſtuduit, That the faith of Chriſt might be deny'd, be more endeavoured to provoke men by honours, then to conſtrain them by torments, Oroſ. l. 7. c. 30. So Aſterius, Hom. 3. de avarit. ſpeaking of his Apoſtaſy, adds, Καὶ τοῖς τῦτο βυλομένοις ποιεῖν πολλὰ προσέκειτο τὰ χρήσιμα, many advantages were propoſed to them that would do the ſame: And again, πόσοι τὸ τῶν ἀξιωμάτων δέλεαρ εἰσδεξάμενοι, μεθ' ἑαυτῶν κατέπιον τὸ τῆς παραδόσεως ἄδικον; how many receiving the bait of dignities ſwallow'd down the hook of Apoſtaſy? δακτυλοδεικούμενοι προδότης, καὶ ἕτοι τῦ Χριστῦ, δι' ὀλίγον ἀργύριον, &c. pointed at as traitors, and thoſe of Chriſt, for a little money. Militiæ cingulum non dari niſi immolantibus jubet, procurationem provinciarum juriſque dicendi Chriſtianis ſtatuit non debere committi, utpote quibus etiam lex propria gladio uti vetuiſſet. He would not allow the military girdle to be given to any that did not ſacrifice, permitted not the government of the provinces, or making of laws, to be committed to the Chriſtians, objecting that their own law forbad them to uſe the ſword, Ruffin. Eccl. hiſt. l. 1. c. 32. To the ſame purpoſe 'tis thought it was that he promoted the building of the Temple of the Jews at Jeruſalem, but God permitted not that to proſper; but as Ammianus l. 23. confeſſeth, metuendi globi flammarum propre fundamenta crebris inſultibus erumpentes fecere locum exuſtis aliquoties operantibus inacceſſum, hócque modo elemento obſtinatius repellente, ceſſavit inceptum, Great flames oft broke out near the foundations and burnt the workmen, and kept them off, and ſo the fire obſtinately reſiſting, the attempt was given over. And Ruffinus's obſervation is very pertinent to this whole matter, l. 1. c. 32. Proficiebat quotidie in hujuſcemodi legibus exquirendis, quibus etſi quid verſutum vel callidum, tamen quod minus videretur crudele, decerneret, he daily ſought out new laws, wherein tho' he ſhew'd great ſubtilty of invention and cunning againſt the Chriſtians, yet be abſtained from all that might have any ſhew of cruelty. And tho' S. Jerom, Theodoret, and * others affirm of him that at his expedition againſt the Perſians he vowed to offer up to his gods the blood of the Chriſtians, in caſe he returned conqueror; yet we know that God ſo diſpoſed, that he was wounded and died in that † expedition, and that in prime of his ſtrength at one and thirty years old, and as Oroſius ſaith, Deus impia conſilia impii morte diſſolvit, God brought the wicked counſels to naught by the death of this wicked man. And accordingly Athanaſius is ſaid to have foretold of him in theſe words, comforting the Chriſtians who feared a perſecution, Nolete, ô filii, conturbari, nubecula eſt & citò pertranſit, Be not troubled, it is a little cloud, and paſſeth away quickly, Ruffin. l. 1. c. 34. and a Chriſtian being asked by Libanius, Julian's inſtructer, what the Carpenter's ſon was a doing? anſwer'd, that he was making a coffin for Julian: Which befel him ſo ſoon after, that S. Jerom on Habakkuk, c. 3. relates a ſpeech of a witty heathen, on occaſion of Julian's death; How, ſaid he, do the Chriſtians ſay of their God, that he is patient and long-ſuffering, whereas by this Emperor's death it appears that he could not defer his indignation, nè modico quidem ſpatio, for the leaſt ſpace: Nihil iracundius, nihil hoc furore præſentius, ſaid he, There could not be greater and more ſudden anger and fury expreſs'd. And although Athanaſius himſelf was by him deſign'd to the ſharpeſt

ſharpeſt part of perſecution, yet God was pleaſed to avert it from him, as Ruffinus relates the ſtory, l. 1. *c.*34. And when at laſt upon occaſion of the removal of the body of the Martyr Babylas, he commanded the Chriſtians to be ſeiz'd on and puniſh'd, the ſtory mentions none but only Theodorus, a young man, that ſuffered by it, who ſang all the while under the tormentor, and complained when his puniſhment was at end, that he was a looſer by his releaſe. See Ruffinus, and Socrates, and Theodoret. By all which appears the power and fidelity of God in making good this promiſe of his to the Chriſtian Church, and reſtraining this Apoſtate's malice from diſquieting the Church, and ſo it is a very great and convincing argument for the truth of this interpretation, rather then an objection againſt it. Having ſaid thus much for the interpreting of theſe thouſand years in a way which is very remote from the conceits of the Millenaries, I muſt expect this objection and ſuggeſtion of theirs againſt it; 1. that the Chiliaſts opinion and interpretation of this place was received univerſally in the firſt ages of the Church; and 2. that it was delivered down from the Apoſtles, and that Juſtin Martyr hath affirmed the former of all Orthodox men in his time, and Ireneus produced teſtimonies of the latter. For the teſtimony of Juſtin Martyr, it is true that he hath theſe words of this matter, ἐγὼ δ' καὶ ἄλλοι πολλοὶ ταῦτα φρονοῦμεν, but I and many others are of this opinion; and again, ἐγὼ δ' καὶ εἰ τινές εἰσιν ὀρθογνώμονες κατὰ πάντα Χριστιανοὶ, I and as many Chriſtians as are orthodox in all things. From hence indeed it is rightly concluded, that Juſtin was himſelf of this opinion, and ſome, nay, if we believe him, many others with him. But that either this was the uncontradicted doctrine of the Church in his age, or that Juſtin ſaith it was ſo, is falſly collected from hence. For firſt, they are the plain words of Juſtin, p. 306. b, Πολλὰς δ' ἂν τῶν τῆς καθαρᾶς καὶ εὐσεβοῦς ὄντων Χριστιανῶν γνώμης τοῦτο μὴ γνωρίζειν ἐσήμανά σοι, I have ſignified to you that many do not acknowledge this doctrine (of Chriſt's reigning here a thouſand years) and thoſe Chriſtians of pure and pious opinion and judgment; and that either the ἂν ſhould againſt conſent of all copies be turned into ἐ or that the μὴ not ſhould be left out, were a bold Criticiſm, and of very ill example to the evacuating the force of all teſtimonies, (making mens words mutable into the direct contradictory) and beſide would render it a very perplexed period. 2*ly*, it appears by Trypho, that he thought Juſtin had equivocated in telling him he believed it, upon this ground, becauſe other Chriſtians were not of this opinion. Hereupon he ſaith to Juſtin, εἰπέ μοι ἀληθῶς, tell me truly whether you are ſincerely of that opinion, ἢ ἵνα δόξης ἐπιτύχῃς· and Juſtin anſwers, that he he would not ſay it, if he had not thought it, and thereupon repeats his having told him, that he and many others were of that opinion, and promiſes to write a book of this diſputation, and confeſs it to others as well as him; and adds, that he means not to follow men and their doctrines, but God: which argues his acknowledgment that the opinion was not uncontradicted by men, nor generally conſented to by Chriſtians. 3*ly*, Thoſe words which ſeem moſt to the contrary, ἐγὼ δ' καὶ εἰ τινές εἰσιν ὀρθογνώμονες κατὰ πάντα Χριστιανοὶ, but I and as many as are Orthodox in all things, will not come home to the proving any more then this, that he was of this opinion, and ſome others in all things conſenting with him. For it being ſuppoſed that he was of that opinion, it cannot be expected of him that he ſhould affirm any, that held it not, to be of right opinion in all things. 4*ly*, It appears that he ſpeaks of three ſorts of men; the firſt that denied both the reſurrection and the thouſand years, and thoſe he calls λεγόμενοι Χριστιανοὶ, ἄθεοι, ἀσεβεῖς, αἱρετικῶν, nominal Chriſtians, Atheiſts, impious, heretical leaders; the ſecond that acknowledged the Reſurrection, and denied the Millennium, and thoſe are contained under Chriſtians of pure and pious opinions; the third that held and maintained both, as himſelf, and many others, and (if there were or) as many as were Orthodox in all things, that is, that in his opinion were ſuch. As for Ireneus, 'tis true, he ſets down the doctrine of the Chiliaſts for a tradition, but withal renders an account of his doing ſo, Preſbyteri qui Johannem viderunt meminerunt audiſſe ſe ab eo, & hæc Papias Johannis auditor, Polycarpi contubernalis, vetus homo teſtata reliquit, The elders that ſaw John, remember that they heard this of him, and Papias St. John's auditor, that dwelt with Polycarp, an ancient man, left theſe things teſtified. By which it appears that this teſtimony of Ireneus amount but to little more then the aſſertion of Papias, who hath not been a perſon of any reverend authority in the Church of God. And indeed upon the ſame grounds Ireneus takes up another opinion, and mentions it as a tradition too, (which is ſure far enough from being tradition, or true) that Chriſt lived till betwixt 40 and 50 years old, for which he voucheth Scripture, and the authority of omnes Seniores, all the Elders, qui in Aſia apud Johannem diſcipulum Domini convenerunt, that were in Aſia with John, who, ſaith he, witneſs that John delivered this to them, and farther, that they that ſaw the other Apoſtles, heard the ſame of them, and bear witneſs of ſuch a relation. Whatſoever can be built on ſuch an authority may as competently be refuted by the authority and reaſons of Dionyſius Alexandrinus, that lived not much above 100 years after S. John, & oppoſed himſelf directly againſt it: and tho' ſome others were otherwiſe minded, yet this doctrine of the Chiliaſts condemn'd by the Church, and ſince that time, all accounted Hereticks that maintained it.

Dial cum Tryph. p. 307

V. 8. Gog and Magog] What is meant by Gog and Magog muſt firſt be fetch'd from the prophecy of Ezekiel, *c.*38, 39. where by both theſe together Antiochus the great enemy and deſtroyer of the Jews is ſignify'd, as having the dominion of Syria and Aſia both: ſee the Learned H. Grotius on Ezekiel. Anſwerable to this is it that Gog ſhould here ſignify the Lydian Aſia, or Lydia, and the neighbouring regions, the Princes whereof are called Gygæ, which is lightly deduced from hence. And ſo in the collection of the Sibyllin oracles, Lydia and Pamphylia are expreſs'd to be the interpretation of Gog. And by this the Ottoman family is fitly deſcribed, not only in reſpect of their malice and miſchief wrought on the people of God, which makes the reſemblance betwixt them and Antiochus complete (ſee c. 14. note c.) but becauſe they firſt ſhew'd themſelves in Lydia, and ſo peculiarly may be called Gog. By Magog Syria is meant, or indeed, in a greater latitude, Scythia, as S. Jerom affirms from the Jews, on Ezek. And ſo ſaith Joſephus, Μαγώγας Σκύθας ἂν αὐτῶν μεταγορεύομένους, The people of Magog are called by them Scythians. By theſe two together the Ottoman family ſeems to be ſignally meant, of which was Mahomet the ſecond, who beſieg'd, and after fifty, or, as Crantzius ſaith, ſixty ſix days ſiege, took Conſtantinople, the ſeat of the Eaſtern Empire, called from thence new Rome, and of the principal Patriarchate there, and converted their chief Church, Templum Sophiæ, the Temple of Wiſdom, into a Temple for Mahometan worſhip, and this, as Leunclavius's Annals, as Crantzius, and other the moſt diligent Chronologers ſet it down, An. Dom. 1453. a thouſand one hundred twenty two years after the building of it (and changing the name from Byzantium) by Conſtantine. Of this ſee Æneas Sylvius Europ. c. 3. & 7. and Ep. 131, 155, 162. who by what he ſaith of it out of ancient writers, viz. that when it was in its flouriſhing condition, they that ſaw it look'd upon it ut deorum potiùs in terris habitaculum, quàm Imperatorum, as an habitation of the gods on earth, rather then of the Emperors, affords us one farther reaſon why it is here call'd ἠγαπημένη πόλις, the beloved city, (and ſo alſo in reſpect of the antient learning preſerved there, which made all men prize it) as its being an eminent Chriſtian city, gives it the title of παρεμβολὴ τῶν ἁγίων, the camp of Saints.

Paraphraſe.

1. And for a clearer repreſentation of that flouriſhing eſtate of the Chriſtian Church for a thouſand years, c. 20. (towhich was annex'd, as in a parentheſis, in a few verſes, the riſe, and ſucceſs, and deſtruction of Mahometiſm, at the end of the third verſe, and from v.7. to v.11. and to that again the day of the laſt doom, from v.11. to the end of the chapter) there was farther repreſented to me a moſt eminent, illuſtrious change, a kind of new world, all the Idolatry, &c. that was before, being done away.

18. And the matter of which this wall was made was Jaſper, a very precious and durable ſtone (ſee c.4.3.) noting the ſeveral ingredients in the Chriſtian faith to be ſuch, precious precepts (a gracious yoke) promiſes of great fidelity, ſure to be performed, and ſuch as all eternity is concerned in; and the Church it ſelf a ſociety of holy men, obſervable for ſincere conſpicuous purity, ſuch as God, who ſees to the bottom of the heart, acknowledges and approves, and ſuch as men may behold and glorify God for them, in both reſpects expreſs'd here by Gold and glaſs; gold in reſpect of the purity and value in the ſight of God, and glaſs in reſpect of the tranſparency of it diſcernible both to God and man: ſee Tobit 13. 16.

19. And the foundations of the wall of the city were garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones. The firſt foundation was Jaſper, the ſecond Sapphire, the third a Chalcedony, the fourth an Emerald,

20 The fifth Sardonyx, the ſixth Sardius, the ſeventh Chryſolite, the eighth Beryl, the ninth Topaz, the tenth Chryſopraſus, the eleventh a Jacinth, the twelfth an Amethyſt.]

19,20. And the Apoſtles, which planted this faith, were repreſented in a moſt glorious manner, by all the moſt precious things imaginable (ſee Tobit 13.17. and Ezek.28.13.) the ſeveral intimations of each of which might have ſomewhat of propriety to each of the Apoſtles, but will hardly be appliable with any certainty, but all together certainly note that which is moſt precious, and ſignify their memory (as themſelves in their life-time) to be ſuch in the Church of God, and any thing that was taught by them to be accepted with veneration.

21. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, every ſeveral gate was of one pearl; and the ſtreet of the city was pure gold, as it were tranſparent glaſs.

21. And the governours of the Church, which had the power of admitting into the Church, or caſting out of it, v. 12. were each of them repreſented as very eſtimable precious perſons; and the ſtreets of the city, that is, the aſſemblies or congregations of Chriſtians in the Church, were like gold and glaſs, (as before, v. 18.) for purity of life and conſpicuouſneſs of it, and even to God, that look'd through the bottom of it, approvable.

22. And I ſaw no Temple therein, for the Lord God * almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it.]

22. And there was liberty to ſerve God in every city and place, and not as it was wont among the Jews, only at Jeruſalem, but whereſoever Chriſtians met together, or in every mans own receſs, they offered up prayers to God, and God in Chriſt was in the midſt of them, eſpecially in the Chriſtian Churches, ſet apart for God's peculiar ſervice in every city and town, and not only in ſome one place for all to reſort to.

23. And the city had no need of the ſun, neither of the moon to ſhine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.]

23. And there was no need of ſun and moon, new ways of revelations for the enlightning this Church, for God by coming down, and pitching his tent (being in our humane nature preſent here) upon the earth, hath planted the faith entirely, and ſo his doctrine is the full light of his Church, the rule of all our faith, and ſo there is no need of any additions, or new revelations.

* eſcape σωζόμενοι

24. And all the people of the world, that come to any ſenſe of their Idolatries and ſins, by all God's judgments fallen upon them, ſhall be content to live ſtrictly according to this rule, (Iſa. 60. 3.) and the Kings of the earth, (ſee Iſa. 49. 23.) the higheſt in all ſorts of power, and learning, &c. will ſubmit themſelves to it, and be glad to be members of the Church, and do their beſt to ſupport it, and endow it with the riches of this world.

25. And the gates of it ſhall not be ſhut at all by day, for there ſhall be no night there.]

25. And there ſhall be a moſt ready hoſpitable reception at all times, for all that will come in to the faith by amendment of life.

26. And they ſhall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.]

26. And the Gentiles of other parts that are not ſubject to the Roman Empire, ſhall come in to the Church, and contribute their beſt to the flouriſhing of it, by endowing of the Church (which is ordinarily meant by honour, ſee Col. 2. note i.)

And this ſhall generally be done by all that have any reſolution of living purely and godly, and only they ſhall be kept out which are immers'd in all filthineſs, and abominable, unnatural, vicious practices, and in all kind of unjuſt dealings (for ſuch cannot by the laws of baptiſm be received, and ſuch will not deſire to undergo Chriſt's diſcipline.)

a. Οὐρανὸς καινὸς καὶ γῆ καινὴ

V. 1. New heaven, and new earth] The heaven and earth ſignify no more then the world, hath been ſhew'd in Note on 2 Pet. 3. b. and conſequently a new heaven and a new earth, inſtead of the old, which is put away, muſt ſignify no more than a new world. And this in the prophetick ſtyle is moſt proper to denote a flouriſhing ſtate and condition of the Church, as there in St. Peter, the new heaven and new earth wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs, is a pure Chriſtian Church planted by Chriſt, inſtead of the old Judaical mode; but this here with ſome difference, noting the flouriſhing condition of it, in oppoſition to the former perſecutions it was under, the change conſiſting in that. And this from Iſa. 65.17. where, creating new heavens and new earth, is ſending the Jews a joyful deliverance, and that a very permanent one, c. 66. 22. To which is appliable that of the Jews, who ſay that whenſoever שר חדש the new ſong is mentioned, 'tis meant of the future age, that of the Meſſias (ſo R. Solomon on Pſal. 96. 1.) and R. Gaon renders the reaſon, becauſe there ſhall be a new heaven and a new earth.

b. Ἱερουσαλὴμ καινὴ

V. 2. New Jeruſalem] The true meaning of the new Jeruſalem mentioned here v. 2. and again with the addition of holy, and the glory of God upon it, v. 11. will be a key to the interpreting this chapter. That it ſignifies not the ſtate of glorified Saints in heaven, appears by its deſcending from heaven in both places, (and that, according to the uſe of that phraſe, c. 10. 1. & 18. 1. as an expreſſion of ſome eminent benefit and bleſſing in the Church) and ſo it muſt needs be here on earth; and being here ſet down with the glory of God upon it, it will ſignify the pure Chriſtian Church, joyning Chriſtian practice with the profeſſion thereof, & that in a flouriſhing condition, expreſs'd by the new heaven and new earth, (ſee Note a.) In this ſenſe we have the ſupernal Jeruſalem, Gal. 4.26. the new Jeruſalem, Rev. 3.12. where to the conſtant profeſſor is promiſed that God will write upon him the name of God, and the name of the city of God, the new Jeruſalem, which there ſignifies the pure Catholick Chriſtian Church. To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that Euſebius in the ſetting forth the flouriſhing of the Chriſtian Church in Conſtantine's time, particularly the building of a magnificent Temple to Chriſt at the place of his ſepulture in Jeruſalem, ſaith of it, that it was καινὴ καὶ νέα Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἧς πρὸ μικροῦ (I ſhould think it ſhould be ἔτι) λόγοι μυρία δι' ἐνθέου πνεύματος προφητεύοντες ἀνυμνοῦσι, the new Jeruſalem, concerning which the holy Scriptures propheſying by divine Spirit do ſing many things, l. 3. De vit. Conſt. c. 32. Where there is little doubt but this book

* Ανω Ἱερουσαλὴμ

and place of his prophetick Revelation is referred to by him, wherein this new Jeruſalem is ſo magnificently ſet out: and tho' his application of it to the building of that Temple at Jeruſalem (both there and before, ἡ νία κατασκαλίζετο Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἀνιπρόσωπος τῇ πάλαι βουλῇ) be ſomewhat too much reſtrained, yet the time of Conſtantine is perfectly agreeable to the notion which we have given of it; and the flouriſhing condition of Chriſtianity, not only at Jeruſalem (of which the building that Temple was an inſtance) but over the whole habitable world (the full importance of it) is not any way excluded by this ſtricter accommodation of his, but is rather evidenced by theſe paſſages to have been the interpretation affix'd to this prophecy in thoſe times wherein he wrote. The only difficulty remaining will be, whether this viſion being here placed after that other of c. 20. concerning the thouſand years, and the Turks invaſions of the Church, it be here ſet to ſignify any new change after that, founded in the deſtruction of the Mahometons, c. 20. 9, 10. or whether it may not more probably be a repetition of the ſame thing more largely which is there ſet down, c. 20. 4, 6. And this latter may ſafely be pitch'd upon, notwithſtanding the placing of it after. For that which hath been obſerved of Joſeph concerning the King's dreams, Gen. 41 32. that the two dreams being to one purpoſe, v. 25. 'twas doubled, to ſhew 'twas eſtabliſhed by God, ſo it hath been ordinary with the Prophets in the Old Teſtament, and oft exemplified here, that two viſions ſhould belong to the ſame matter. And this here very pertinent to the one deſign of all theſe Viſions, to fortify the ſeven Churches of Aſia, by foretelling largely the flouriſhing condition to which God ſhould at laſt advance the Chriſtian Church, which being but briefly pointed at in the former chapter (and that with a mixture of the contrary) & only the ſpace of it for the thouſand years particularly and punctually inſiſted on, 'twas here fit to be more largely and rhetorically ſet down, being a thing of ſo great importance. That this is the meaning of the new Jeruſalem may further appear by an eminent monument in the prophecy of old Tobit before his death, c. 14. 6, 7. where the third great period prophefied of by him is expreſs'd by the building up Jeruſalem glorioufly (of the former ſee Note on Mat. 24. c. and the Premon.) the beginning of which is the converſion of the Gentile world, and their burying their idols, v.6. (which was the ſum of theſe former Viſions, c. 18.) and then follows, all nations praiſing the Lord, all people confeſſing God, and the Lord's exalting his people, and all thoſe that love the Lord our God in truth and juſtice ſhall rejoice, ſhewing mercy to our brethren, a ſtate of flouriſhing piety, magnifying, bleſſing, praiſing God, and of charity and mercy to all men, which is the ſum of this enſuing Viſion, and (as that there, ſo here) the concluſion of all.

c. ἰδὺ Σκηνὴ Θεῦ

V. 3. Behold the Tabernacle of God] The meaning of this phraſe ἰδὺ ἡ Σκηνὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, behold the tabernacle of God with men, will eaſily appear by remembring the affinity of the Σκηνὴ tabernacle, and the Schechinah, appearance or preſence of God, called here v. 11. δόξα glory, and oft elſewhere. God is wont to be ſaid in Scripture to be preſent where his Angels appear; accordingly the Pictures of the Cherubims in the Tabernacle, and after in the Temple, were notes of his peculiar preſence there. And ſo both the Jewiſh Temple and Chriſtian Church having the promiſe of God's peculiar preſence, is fitly ſtiled his Tabernacle here, and c. 13. 6. and elſewhere his houſe, both in the ſame ſenſe, a tabernacle being but a moveable houſe. And then behold the tabernacle of God with men, is no more but an interpretation of that which was repreſented in this Viſion, viz. that hereby was noted the Church of Chriſt, whoſe title is Emmanuel, God with us, or God with men, God incarnate; and the ἰδὺ behold, is a determination of it to what went immediately before, thus, The bride adorned for the husband, is the Chriſtian Church (ſee v. 9.) And then the promiſe that follows, he will dwell with 'em, &c. is his marrying, and endowing, and living, & dwelling with this ſpouſe, that is, continuing his favour and love, and protection to the Church, as long as that continues faithful to him, performs the duties of a wife, obedience and fidelity to the husband. And then conſequent to that mercy and protection is the ceſſation of perſecutions that follows, καὶ ἐξαλείψει πᾶν δάκρυον, and he ſhall wipe every tear from their eyes, &c. remove all cauſe of ſorrow from the Chriſtians.

V. 8. Fearful] The δειλοὶ cowardly here, which are ſet in the front of all theſe ſins, denote the renouncers of Chriſt in time of perſecution, ſet oppoſite to perſevering Chriſtians, v. 7. and here clearly ſignify the Gnoſticks, or ſuch as they were, whoſe poſition it was, that 'twas an indifferent, and ſo a lawful thing to forſwear Chriſt in time of perſecution, and to ſacrifice to Idols (here alſo noted by Idolatry.) They are farther expreſs'd by ἄπιστοι unfaithful, that fall off from Chriſt; and more eſpecially by ἐβδελυγμένοι deteſted, and πόρνοι fornicators, and φαρμακεῖς, ſorcerers, &c. ſee Note on c. 2. b. & ch. 9. c. & 1 Joh. 4. a. So Tertullian interprets it in Scorp. contra Gnoſt. c. 12. Inter reprobos, imò ante omnes, timidis, inquit, particula in ſtagno ignis, Ap. 21. Among the reprobates, yea before all them, the cowardly have their portion in the lake of fire.

V. 10. City] That the City is the Church is moſt evident in this viſion, being before called the holy city, the new Jeruſalem, v. 2. Now the wall is that which encompaſſeth the city, keeps all out which are not thought fit to be admitted, and guards and ſecures the city. And to this the Chriſtian doctrine is perfectly anſwerable: none are to be admitted or continued there which do not acknowledge that; and ſo this likewiſe defends and fortifies the Church from the invaſion of Hereticks. And he that teacheth any other doctrine, let him be Anathema. As for the μέγα καὶ ὑψηλὸν, greatneſs and highneſs of this wall, that ſignifies the excellence and even divinity of his doctrine, admirable precepts, divine and heavenly promiſes. And as this is a defenſative to the city, ſo the foundations thereof are the ſeveral preachings of the Apoſtles in all their travels, which being the ſame in all places, this one wall is ſaid to have twelve foundations, ver. 14. and on them the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb, to ſignify thoſe doctrines that are not thus founded on their preaching, either by word of mouth, or by writing deduced from them, not to be fit for reception in the Church.

f. Μέτρον ἀνθρώπου

V. 17. Meaſure of a man] That Μέτρον ἀνθρώπου, the meaſure of a man, refers here to the ſtature of a man, appears moſt probably by the addition of ὅ ἐστιν ἀγγέλου, that is of an Angel. For as here the perſon ſeen in the Viſion was an Angel, v. 9. ſo Ezek. 40. 3. where there is mention of this meaſuring reed, it was ſhew'd him by a man whoſe appearance was like the appearance of braſs, that is, a man in a glorious appearance, ſuch as Angels uſed to appear in. And then the Μετρον or meaſure muſt refer, not to the cubit, immediately precedent, but to the Κάλαμος, or reed, v. 15. noting that reed by which he had meaſured the city to be about ſix foot long, and ſo the meaſure or ſtature of a man, or Angel in humane ſhape, as now he appeared unto him. That the reed or pole was of this ſize, that is, ſix foot long, may be concluded from Ezek. 40. 5. There, as here, was a man with a meaſured reed, v. 3. and that reed was ſix cubits long, but that cubit not, as 'tis ordinarily counted, a foot and a half, but as it is taken by the meaſure of that bone which gives the denomination; Πῆχυς διάστημα ἀπὸ τοῦ ὠλεκράνου ἕως τῆς καρπῆς, a cubit is the diſtance from the elbow to the wriſt, as Ariſtotle, and the Anatomiſts determine, which is in well-proportioned bodies the fifth part of a man's ſtature. And that this was the acceptation of πῆχυς, as among the Grecians ſo among the Hebrews, appears by the account of Joſephus de Bell. Jud. l. ε'. c. ιγ'. where having made the wall to contain 90 turrets, each of them 20 cubits long, and the ſpace betwixt each to be 200 cubits, which muſt conclude the the circuit of the wall to be 19800 cubits) he adds, Τῆς πόλεως ἡ ὁ πᾶς κύκλος σταδίων ἐστὶν τριάκοντα τριῶν, the whole compass of the city was thirty three furlongs: which concludes the allotment of 600 cubits to every furlong; and that we know among the Greeks contained 600 foot. So that the cubit is no more then a foot, or the sixth part of a man's stature. So when Solinus saith of the walls of Babylon, * quorum altitudo ducentos pedes detinet, that they were two hundred foot high, and so † Pliny, * Orosius saith they were fifty cubits broad, altitudine quater tantâ, four times as high, that is, two hundred cubits; and so saith Herodotus, ὕψος δὲ πηχέων ἐγένετο, the height was two hundred cubits. That all this measuring of the city is mystically to be understood, and not literally, there is no doubt; but what the mystery is, will not be obvious to determine. This may perhaps be it, that the considering or pondering, that is, measuring of the Church, the duration, the extent, the flourishing of it, here described, as also of the walls thereof, the Christian faith, is the work, delight, desire of Angels, one of the number of those things which the Angels desire to look into, 1 Pet. 1. 12. Ephes. 3. 10, 18, 19.

CHAP. XXII.

Paraphrase.

1 AND he shewed me [a] a pure river of water of life, clear as chrystal, proceeding out of the Throne of God, and of the Lamb.]

1. And in the same vision I farther saw, by the Angels shewing me, or pointing to it, a font or baptistery, to which they that were admitted were bound to undertake all purity of living, and the power of admitting to that was intrusted to the Governours of the Church, by Christ communicated to them.

2. In the midst of the [b] street * of it and [c] on either side the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month, and [d] the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.]

2. And I saw also a place for Christian assemblies; and betwixt that and the font was the tree of life planted, noting these two to be great obligations, and advancers of piety in mens hearts, such as should bring forth all manner of fruits of holiness at all seasons. And the visible outward profession and form of piety in the Church (perhaps discipline, and government, and ceremonies instituted in it) were to be of great use, as to attract others and bring them into the Church, so to keep men in a good healthy state of soul, or reduce and restore them that are fallen from it.

3. And † there [e] shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him.]

3. And for notorious sinners, such to whom the censures of the Church belong, they shall not be permitted to continue in it; for the Christian judicatures shall never cease, or be turned out of it, for the space of the thousand years (as many other governments have failed) and all Christians will submit to it.

4. And such as do so shall have the favour of God, and shall be accounted true Christian servants of his.

5. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.]

5. And in this Church of Christ there shall be no more sadness or darkness, no want of refreshment or comfort, God shall be all in all unto them: and they shall never fail to enjoy this felicity of cheerful Christian living, this freedom of serving God, &c. express'd by being Kings, see note on ch. 1. d. and by reigning with Christ, ch. 20. 4.

6. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true. And the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his Angel to shew unto his servants the things that must * shortly be done.]

6. And the Angel then began to conclude and fold up his discourse to me, and to sum up what I had seen in this vision, telling me, That all this, as strange and glorious as it was, should certainly come to pass, and that that God which inspired and gave commissions to all the prophets had now sent an Angel to make this revelation, by way of vision, of those things that were speedily to commence, and one after another to come to pass.

* suddenly, ἐν τάχει

7. Behold, I come quickly: Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.]

7. And this consideration of the speediness of the completion of these prophecies, that of the prosperity of the Church under the Christian Emperors and Kings within 250 years, but of those that concerned the destruction of the Jews and Gnosticks, the present enemies and persecutors of Christians, every where call'd the coming of Christ (see note on Mat. 24. b.) now immediately approaching, is of so important consideration to every one who now lives in the Christian Church, that as 'tis the only way to felicity for a man to guide his actions by the contents of this prophecy, so 'twill go very ill with him that doth not.

8. And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the Angel which shewed me these things.]

8. And I that write all this book of visions, by way of Epistle to the sev'n Churches of Asia, am that very person that saw and heard all that is here set down: And when I did see them and hear them, I was so transported with the joyfulness of the matter of them, that I did in expression of a true sense of that benefit, perform a most humble obeisance to him that had been the messenger to conveigh it to me: see ch. 19. 10.

9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: Worship God.]

9. But he would not permit me, saying, I am but a fellow-servant of thine, and but equal to the other prophets which are thy brethren, (thou thy self being such an one by being an Apostle, see ch. 19. 10.) and they that live Christianly, and persevere in the faith of Christ against all temptations, according to the design of this book, are absolutely such as I am, the servants of God also. Let God have the thanks and praise of all that shall be done, and of all that is now revealed to thee.

10. And he saith unto me, seal not the sayings of the prophecies of this book, for the time is at hand.]

10. And then, methought, Christ himself said thus unto me, Seal not, shut not up this prophecy (as sealing is opposed to leaving open and legible, Isa. 29. 11.) Lay it not up as a thing that only future ages are concerned in: for the time of the completion of a great part of it is so immediately at hand, that 'tis fit the prophecy should be open, for all to see and to observe the completion of it.

11. He that is * unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which † is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him * be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still.]

11. And now the bad and good shall come to receive their sentence: there remain not now any more seasons of working changes on any, but he that is now an impenitent persecutor of Christianity, an impenitent carnal Gnostick, is like suddenly to be taken and dealt with accordingly: and on the other side, he that hath held out constant for all those terrors and persecutions, and deceits of carnal sins, is suddenly to receive the fruits and reward of it.

16. I Jesus have sent unto thee my Angel, with all these visions concerning the seven Churches, and all other passages concerning the universal Church of God. I am he that am known by the Prophets by these several titles, The root of Jesse, The son of David (and therefore can bring down the mightiest Kings, as David did) The star that ushers in the day, all lightsomness and cheerfulness into the world, (see ch. 2. note o.)

And let every one that heareth these visions say the same, seeing the important advantages of it, and dangers of the contrary: and whosoever will, may have a cheerful admission to it, and to that refreshing assistance of grace and pardon of sin that is reach'd out there.

17. And the Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.]

18. As for all those to whom this prophecy shall come, I conjure them all that they change not a title of it, and withal, that they look upon it as the last authoritative prophecy that is likely to come from heaven, to be a rule of faith to the Church. What is here said, is decreed and settled immutable; no man shall be able to avert it: and whosoever shall go about to infuse any other expectations into men then what are agreeable to these visions, God shall bring on him the judgments that are here denounced against God's greatest enemies.

V. 1. A pure river] The five first verses of this chapter belong to the business of the former chapter, the description of the Christian Church in its flourishing condition, and ought not to have been divided from it. And this first verse hath a nearer connection with that which immediately preceded. There in the beginning of it is mention of entrance into the Church, and who they were that should not be admitted to it. Now this entrance we know was by Baptism, and that is sure express'd here by the καθαρὸς ποταμὸς ὕδατος ζωῆς, the pure river of water of life. The place wherein they baptized was first any great pool of water (typified, Ezek. 47. 5. by waters to swim in) where they might go in, as Philip with the Eunuch, and be put under water; from whence it is ordinarily by the ancients call'd κολυμβήθρα, a pool. In the times here referred to, that is, under Constantine, the Font was in the Court before the Church, Fountain water running always into it. This Fountain-water is in the New-Testament call'd ζῶν ὕδωρ, living water, and here by analogy water of life, but that with the addition of a mystical sense, (as when Ezek 47.9. it is said, that every thing that moveth, whersoever the waters come, shall live; or when Christ speaks of ὕδωρ ἁλλόμενον εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, water leaping, or springing, to eternal life) because Baptism as an initiation into the Church, is an entrance into a Christian and eternal life. And the water in the Baptistery or Font, maintained from the spring, is called here ποταμὸς river, a word by which any running water is called, and so that Ezek. 47. 5. And this River καθαρὸς pure, because Baptism is a federal sacramental undertaking of all purity of living, forsaking all sin, and engaging of the soul to purity; and in the same respect it is also said to be λαμπρὸς ὡς Κρύσταλλος, clear as Chrystal, being an obligation to all purity in the baptized. Now that this pure river is said to proceed, not as Ezek. 47. 1. from under the threshold of the house, but out of the throne of God and the Lamb, hath some more difficulty in it, which, I conceive, may thus be resolved; The throne is a notation of power and judicature, as when God is introduced in the Vision, c. 4. 1. sitting on a throne; and so the throne of the Lamb is that power which is by Christ instated on the Governours of the Church, of which the power of baptizing being one special part, this river by which baptism is expressed, is fitly said to proceed out of the throne. To which purpose it must be observed, that the power of baptizing, though communicated to inferior Priests and Deacons, was at first in the Apostles, and from them descended to the Bishops, and never permitted to any but by appointment from the Bishop. So saith Ignatius, οὐκ ἔξον ἐστὶ χωρὶς τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου οὔτε βαπτίζειν, &c. in Ep. ad Smyrn. 'Tis not lawful to baptize without the Bishop: And Tertullian de Bapt. Dandi baptismum jus habet summus Sacerdos, qui est Episcopus, dein Presbyteri & Diaconi, non tamen sine Episcopi authoritate, The chief Priest, who is called the Bishop, hath the power of giving baptism, after him the Presbyters and Deacons, but not without the authority of the Bishop. And S. Cyprian makes two parts of the power of the keys, (that ruling power, as of the œconomus, intrusted to the Governours of the Church, the the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles) the one to admit as by the key in Baptiſm, the other by Abſolution. And that moſt probably is the meaning of this place, where the baptiſmal Water is in the Viſion ſaid to proceed from the throne of God, and of the Lamb.

b. Πλατείᾳ. V. 2. Street] What πλατεία the ſtreet denotes in this Viſion may be eaſily reſolved by obſerving that the ſtreets or broad places of a city are places of concourſe and reſort, and ſo συναγωγαὶ and ῥύμαι, aſſemblies and ſtreets, are uſed together in the ſame ſenſe, Mat. 6. 5. Accordingly the ſtreet or broad place here will be fit to denote the place of aſſembly in the Church or City of God, where the prayers are offered up, and the ſacrifice of the Church in the Euchariſt, and where inſtruction is reach'd out to them.

c. Ξύλον ζωῆς. Ib. On either ſide of the river.] That the tree of life here mentioned (inſtead of the very many trees in Ezechiel, ch. 47. 7.) looks back to Paradiſe, where that tree was ſet, Gen. 2. 9. doth ſeem moſt probable, and well accords alſo with the river here joyn'd with it, as there v. 10. a river went out out of Eden to water the garden. And therefore what is here meant by it in the prophetick notion, may be beſt learn'd from the allegorical interpretations which the ancient Writers affix to it in the Old Teſtament; for thoſe will be moſt agreeable to the prophetick ſtyle, which we know is made up of figures. Now of the tree of life, ſaith Philo, it ſignified θεοσέβειαν, Piety, or Worſhip of GOD. And ſo Clemens Alexandrinus, that the tree of knowledge was ἐὰν παραβαίνωμεν, if we tranſgreſs, that is, it ſignified ſin, of which whoſoever taſted, ſhould die, but the tree of life denoted piety, of which he that eat, ſhould live eternally. Other deſcants there are on it here, that it ſhould ſignifie the croſſe of Chriſt, or the enlivening grace of God: but this is the moſt agreeable to the Context, and the other circumſtances thereof. But it muſt here be enquired what is the meaning of this phraſe, ἐν μέσῳ πλατείας--ᾗ τε ποταμοῦ, ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν, which we render, in the midſt of the ſtreet of it, and on either ſide the River; but the words bear not that, and a great inconvenience there muſt be in ſo rendring them, for the tree of life, which appears to be in Paradiſe and here but one, and not many, as in Ezechiel, nor ſet on the bank of the river, as there, muſt yet be ſuppoſed to be on both ſides of the river, which is impoſſible. The beſt and moſt literal rendring will be this, ἐν μέσῳ τῆ πλατείας καὶ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, in the midſt of the ſtreet and the river, ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐκεῖθεν, (or, as the Kings MS. reads, καὶ ἐκατέρωθεν) on this ſide and on that ſide, that is, not as in Ezechiel, the many trees on the one ſide and on the other ſide of the river, but ſo, as may be applicable to the one tree, and to the ſtreet, and river here named, one of them on one ſide, t'other on the other ſide of the tree. That this is the meaning of the phraſe may appear from not only by the commodiouſneſs of this ſenſe, and the abſurdities conſequent to the other rendring, but alſo by comparing it with another paſſage in this writer, John 19. 18. where it is ſaid they crucified Chriſt, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ἄλλους δύο, ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν, μέσον δὲ τὸν Ἰησοῦν, and with him two others, on this ſide and on that ſide, and Jeſus in the midſt (A phraſe very near to this, ἐν μέσῳ here being all one with μέσον there.) There Jeſus is in the midſt of the two thieves, that is, between them, and that expreſs'd by the ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν, as here; That muſt ſignifie there one of them on this ſide of him, and the other on that, and therefore it muſt in all reaſon be ſo here alſo, the ſtreet on one ſide, and the river on the other ſide, and the tree of life in the midſt, or betwixt them. This being thus far clear, for the literal underſtanding of it, and for the repreſentation not abſolutely the ſame with that in Ezechiel, but lightly varied from it in ſome few circumſtances, the myſtical or prophetical meaning of it will be clear alſo, that betwixt the place of aſſembling on one ſide, and the Font or Baptiſtry on the other ſide, ſtood Piety in the midſt, Baptiſm being on purpoſe deſigned to initiate, and engage us to piety, and by God's grace to enable us to perform it, and the ſervice of God in the aſſembly, the ptayers and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and Chriſtian inſtruction deſigned ſo too, for the confirming our vows of new life, and to inſtruct us farther in our duty, and to bring down more grace for the performance of it. What is added of the δώδεκα καρπούς, (not twelve manner of fruits, but) twelve fruits, is taken from Ezechiel alſo, ch. 47. 12. and is not to be applied to any ſet number of ſeveral vertues, as ſome would have it, but to the conſtant continual production of them, not at a few, but at all ſeaſons; for ſo the year being the meaſure of all time, bearing fruit as oft as there be months in the year, muſt needs ſignifie the continual, conſtant fruitfulneſs of it. And this was much for the honour of the tree, few trees bearing above once a year, few in the winter, but this every month in the year; and ſo the fitter to denote Chriſtian piety, to which our Baptiſm engageth us, and our living in the Church confirms that engagement on us, and both to continue to ſerve God in holineſs and righteouſneſs all the days of our lives.

Ib. The leaves of the tree.] The leaves of a tree that beareth fruit are of uſe to guard and preſerve the fruit; and beſides they are ſaid to be εἰς θεραπείαν, for healing or medicine. That which is moſt probably here meant by theſe leaves of this tree of life, is the outward viſibleneſs and exemplarineſs of piety, which accompanies the fruits of it. This in ſingle perſons is only the ſhining of their light before men, which is of great uſe to attract others (even the ἔθνη, if that ſignifie the Gentiles, Unbelievers here) to Chriſtianity, who ſee their good works; whereas the ſcandalous ſins of Chriſtians are apt to aliene and deter others from that profeſſion. But in a Church theſe leaves may ſignifie more alſo, the publick and frequent aſſembling for the ſervice and worſhip of God, and the Canons and exerciſe of ſtrict diſcipline, &c. And that theſe latter, of the diſcipline and cenſures of the Church, are meant by theſe leaves, may be collected not only by the uſefulneſs of them to the preſerving works of piety in a Church, (as leaves are for preſerving the fruit,) and ſecondly, by the propriety of them in order to the curing of the diſeaſes of mens ſouls, the reforming of lapſed ſinners, which may be here expreſs'd by εἰς θεραπείαν for healing; but alſo by that which follows preſently upon it, v. 3. which moſt ſignally belongs to this matter of Cenſures, (ſee Note e.) d. Φύλλα.

V. 3. Shall be no more curſe.] That ἀνάθεμα, a curſe or execration, is ordinarily taken for the perſon to whom that Cenſure or ſecond ſort of Excommunication belongs, appears by the uſe of it in other places of the New Teſtament. Thus Rom. 9. 3. ηὐχόμην ἀνάθεμα εἶναι, I could wiſh to be a curſe, that is, accurſed, from Chriſt, ſeparate or excommunicate from the body of Chriſt, ſeparate or excommunicate from the body of Chriſt, the Church. So 1 Cor. 16. 22. If any man love not——let him be anathema; and Gal. 1. 8. If I or an angel ſhall teach any other doctrine, let him be anathema. In all theſe places the word Curſe is clearly put for an excommunicate or accurſed perſon, put under the cenſures or execration of the Church; and accordingly here in any reaſon πᾶν κατάθεμα, every curſe, muſt ſignifie every wicked perſon fit for the Cenſures of the Church: And then the οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, ſhall be no longer, muſt ſignifie the exerciſe of ſuch diſcipline in the Church, in excluding all ſuch wicked Perſons out of it, and ſo to the mention of Baptiſm, by the River, v. 1, 2. and of the Chriſtian aſſemblies, by the ſtreets, v. 2. adds the uſe of excommunication in the Chriſtian Church, for which we know Eccleſiaſtical Judicatories were erected in Conſtantine's time, and ſo continued under the favour of Chriſtian Emperors and Princes. By which appears alſo what is meant by the Throne of God and the Lamb in this verſe, viz. Chriſtian Judicatories for the excommunicating of ſcandalous offenders, wherein the power exerciſed by the Biſhops is acknowledged to be the Power of God, or Chriſt, and this Throne here the ſame with that v. 1. the power of Baptizing and of excommunicating, of admitting and excluding from the Church, being branches of the ſame authority, by Chriſt communicated to the Apoſtles.

V. 18. If any man ſhall add——] This form of ſpeech here uſed to conclude this Book is, Firſt, a Symbolical and prophetical form of expreſſing the certainty and immutability of this Prophecy; and Secondly, an expreſſion of the abſoluteneſs and perfection of it in order to publick uſe, that it ſhould be the one prophecy given to the Chriſtian Church, which ſhould bring divine authority along with it, ſent with a commiſſion from heaven; and not only proceeding from a publick ſpirit, but ſent out with a publick charge, that (as Joſephus ſaith cont. Appion. l. 1. that after the time of Artaxerxes, though many excellent things were written, yet they brought not divine authority with them, nor conſequently were ſo received or believed, becauſe there was not then a certain ſucceſſion of Prophets, and * no body durſt add, or detract, or change any thing in the Old Canon after ſo long time, ſo) though there might be ſome Prophets after St. John, (as Juſtin Martyr tells us, that the gift of Prophecie remained in the Church till his time) yet this Book ſhould be the laſt, and ſo the cloſe and ſeal of all publick Prophecy, and that therefore no new doctrine was now farther to be expected by the Chriſtian Church, and whoſoever taught any as a rule of faith and life, and pretended Revelation for it, ſhould fall under the cenſure denounced againſt falſe Prophets, Deut. 13. and under Saint Paul's anathema, Gal. 1. 8, 9. That this ſhould be only an ἐξορκισμὸς, or adjuration of the Scribe, as in the end of Irenæus in ſome Copies there is an adjuration not to add or diminiſh (and as 'tis ſaid in Ariſteas, that after the tranſlation of the Septuagint, Demetrius perſwaded the Jews to add an imprecation on any that ſhould change, or add, or tranſpoſe, or take away any word from it) was the conjecture of a learned man, Mr. Lively; and as it may very well be received, ſo need it not prejudge thoſe other importances of it before mentioned.
